Sports gambling occurs at University

by Aaron Dorksen
contributing writer

Editor's note: Names of those who participate in illegal sports gambling have been changed in order to obtain correct and truthful information.

There is gambling paraphernalia everywhere. Bets are written on napkins, bank receipts, post-it notes and anything else that is handy.

Rich, acknowledged by bettors as one of the top bookies in Bowling Green, has been on and off the phone for nearly an hour taking bets for the NCAA title game between North Carolina and Michigan.

The calls really start piling in as the minutes tick away before the opening tip-off.

During the 1991-92 school year, Rich estimates he handled an average of $8,000 in bets a week, which translates to about $250,000 in wagers for the fall and spring semesters combined.

Rich, a senior from a large Midwest suburb, has booked for area residents -- primarily students -- since he came to the University four years ago.

"I started betting in high school through one of the largest bookies in the city," he said. "We made a deal when I came here; I would start taking bets in the area and book them through him."

For compensation, Rich said he receives a 20 percent cut of all losses incurred by his bettors.

"After football season I made $3,000," he said. "I have about 20 to 30 people who bet through me regularly each week. There are other people who call themselves bookies, but a lot of them end up putting the bets they collected through me."

Scott does not bet, but said he considers himself an expert on the small enterprise run by his roommate.

"The operation is unbelievable. Rich has 20 to 30 people who regularly call him to bet, but there are a lot more than that involved," Scott said. "If some guy from the dorms calls regularly to bet and also places bets for six friends down the hall, he doesn't even know people he's booking."

"I've been in bars before and talked to people who say they bet sports through somebody, who puts the bets through somebody else. Usually it ends up their bet goes through Rich."

The roommates joke that "all roads lead back to Rich."

However, they said sports betting is not all the laughs and money it is cracked up to be.

Rich is also as big a gambler as any of his clients, and he often loses the profits he makes taking bets, such as the $3,000 he made during the football season.

"I am addicted to gambling. It has made me very miserable, miss class and not get the grades I should," Rich said. "I stay awake each night until at least 2:30 waiting for all the late scores and trying to unwind.

Gambling: The game behind the games

"Some nights it's hard to sleep at all because I lay awake thinking about a blocked field goal or a missed ground ball that cost me $1,000."

Another aspect of the operation which Rich said causes a lot of personal stress is collecting money owed to him.

"One of my friends was up several thousand dollars last year during basketball season.

He started betting bigger, $500 to $800 on a single game, and within a month he was down $3,700," Rich said.

Being a close friend, Rich allowed him to bet more money -- money he did not have -- to give him a chance to break even.

According to Rich, the break never came. His friend now owes him what some workers make in a whole year, and it is money Rich said he never expects to see.

"The guy I work for knows that I am going to have trouble collecting sometimes," Rich said.

"But he trusts me because I don't pull no shots; I tell him the truth. Nine out of 10 times he listens to me."

"As a bookie I've seen how greedy people can get; I try not to let them get in too deep."

What happens to bettors unable to pay is not as dramatic and violent as portrayed in many movies.

Authorities say betting very difficult to discover

by Aaron Dorksen
contributing writer

Americans wager over $50 billion each year on sporting events -- more than half of that is bet illegally.

According to a report in Gambling and Wagering Business, a gambling trade magazine, sports bettors wagered $57.1 billion in 1989 -- $38 billion illegally.

Both law enforcement and University officials in Bowling Green admit sports gambling happens, but they say it is very difficult to do anything about it unless someone involved goes to the authorities.

According to Scott Coon, assistant county prosecuting attorney, investigating or prosecuting a sports gambling ring is very rare for his office.

First time gambling offenders are almost always charged with a misdemeanor, which is handled in municipal court, Coon said.

The County Prosecuting Attorney's Office handles felony cases only. For a gambling case to be considered a felony, a person must have a prior conviction.

Coon said he knows sports gambling takes place in Bowling Green, but it is an area of crime difficult to investigate.

"No one is going to come forward with information unless they have a personal grudge against the bookie, if they got beat up or something," he said. "Other than that, a bookie would have to slip up or be really careless."

After seven years in the County Prosecuting Attorney's Office, Coon said he remembers only one gambling case, and it did not involve sports.

"Someone was running a small-time shell game, going around to local rest stops," he said. "He was booked with a misdemeanor."

Sports gambling cases are just as rare in municipal court said Pat Brenneman, who works in the office.

"I have been here for four years, and we haven't had any cases involving sports gambling in that time," Brenneman said. "I'm not aware of it being a problem."

Regent tells of efficient future

by Michael Zawacki
faculty reporter

Elaine H. Hairston, chancellor of the Ohio Board of Regents, spoke to University faculty Thursday about securing the future of higher education in Ohio.

Faculty from the University of Toledo and the Medical College of Ohio were also on hand to hear Hairston's views on the current situation of higher education in the state and how it can be made more effective and efficient in the future.

Hairston said over the last 30 years "higher education has blossomed into an incredible enterprise of great magnitude and complexity, and more students than ever before entered state college and universities as the need for an educated citizen became self-evident."

Hairston said a change in the workplace marked an emergence of vocal support for higher education deeply rooted in the local community.

Currently, she said a focus on research and graduate education continues to be important in the global market place and in local communities.

"Ohio universities attract over $200 million annually in research efforts as well as attracting millions in terms of a broader expansion of environmental and economic growth in the local community," Hairston said.

She said this growth has been paralleled by a stimulation in the academic classroom as universities and colleges find they are serving more students because the connection between income and education has become more apparent.

"With the coming of this decade, three out of every four new job titles will require a post-secondary education," Hairston said.

Hispanic issues discussed

The BG News/Tim Norman

Toledo City Councilwoman Raquel Bravo Snyder addresses over 100 people in McFall Center Gallery Thursday night as part of the Miguel Ornelas Human Relations Lecture Series. Snyder discussed how Hispanics have become the invisible minority in society, especially in the educational system.

by Larissa Hritsko
human diversity reporter

The first Hispanic councilwoman in Toledo expressed her concerns about the education and futures of Latino children during a speech on campus Thursday night.

Raquel Bravo Snyder, the keynote speaker as part of the Miguel Ornelas Human Relations Lecture Series, addressed about 100 people in the McFall Center Gallery.

"With the lack of documentation, we are an invisible minority and then an invisible problem," she said. "If the problem is not documented there is no problem and no discussion."

Snyder said 40 percent of Hispanic students are behind in their grade levels, 10 percent drop out of high school by 10th grade and 30 percent more drop out before graduation. Only 20 percent enroll in college, of which half graduate.

She said the problem of Hispanic education should be fought now while the numbers are small enough to manage.

"Right now the Hispanic community is at 24.1 million, out of 380.7 million [U.S.] citizens, and in 2015 there will be 81 million Hispanics accounting for 21 percent of the population," Snyder said.

SLS requests Ohio Supreme Court order to redistrict city

by Chris Hawley
local government reporter

Student Legal Services attorneys have completed a written request that the Ohio Supreme Court order the city to redistrict so each of its four wards contains an equal amount of people.

SLS attorneys Gregory Bakies and Rodney Fleming said they mailed the nine-page petition for a writ of mandamus to the court in Columbus Thursday. Bakies said he expects the court to consider the petition this summer.

"It should be heard within weeks," Bakies said. "Mandamus actions are usually relatively quick actions."

The petition claims the city's ward system violates the Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment by giving different weights to the votes of people living in each ward when electing city council ward representatives.

There are 12,674 people living in Ward One; 6,287 in Ward Two; 3,499 in Ward Three; and 5,716 in Ward Four. Each ward elects one representative to the city council.

The petition claims that when electing

E.A.R. to the Ground ...

Since the end of the semester is approaching with all the subtlety of Brother Jed on a caffeine high, we students of BGSU are finally able to do what we've wanted to do since January -- sell back our books.

Hurry, though. There's no greater feeling of personal disgust and internal anger than standing in line at one of our neighborhood book stores, slapping down a text you originally paid $55.95 for, only to hear, "We just filled up our stock on that one. SORRY!"

Only mildly less vexing is when the bizarre book bazaar offers you, oh, about one-nineteenth of what you originally shelled out for your collegiate journal. ("Let's see, you paid $60 for this business book. Hmmm, we'll give you a buck. And we'll take your shoes, too.")

The earlier you return, the better, so we at E.A.R. strongly encourage any and all frugal students to sell your books immediately and forego studying for finals.

Like you can afford gas money to get to campus!

Ahhhh ... there is nothing so wonderful as checking out of the dorms for summer vacation.

Actually, a root canal without Novocaine would be less painful and more appealing.

It's virtually impossible to vacuum your floor during the school season because you can't see it. C'mon -- a dorm room is like living in a shoebox with air holes (you know, the big gaping holes underneath your door -- which, by the way, must be really attractive to potential kleptos).

Therefore, vacuuming the floor is like trying to delint your black T-shirt with a two-inch piece of Scotch tape. It can't be done. And -- if it's not done -- the student has the pleasure of receiving one helluva fine. (Like the University needs more money from us.)

Does the administration reeeeeealllll need the money so bad that they fine the student for improper checkout because there's some lint on the floor?

C'mon -- they should have seen it a week ago when the floor was covered with cigarette butts and empty (except for the ashes floating around) beer cans. AHM ... I mean, WHOOPS, students NEVER drink or smoke in the dorms.

Being that this is our last Friday edition of the year, we thought it would be kind of nice to take this opportunity to wish all of the graduating seniors here at the University the best of luck in whatever they go on to do. It's away from BG and off to the real world for these folks, so good luck. And for you lucky undergraduates who will be returning, have a great summer and we'll see you in the fall.

Farewell from a toad lick

List of ABC's provides summary of semester worth of writing

A note to my readers: This is my last column for The News. I thought I would do it in a clever alphabet format because I know my ABC's, and I like alphabet soup.

Animal crackers: I like to bite their heads off as though my teeth are a guillotine.

Brainwaves: I'm only on the second letter, and already they're lacking.

Crayola crayons: I got a letter from the Binney & Smith people because I misused their trademark in a past column. WRONG -- red Crayolas are great with salad. RIGHT -- red Crayola crayons are great with salad.

Dreadlocks: Don't you love 'em?

Exam week: It might be a little difficult to remember this during the upcoming week, but shouldn't our classes be focused more on learning instead of testing?

Fishsticks: They can be very, very steak-like.

Golden Grahams: Mice crave them.

Hegemonic forces: Are the forces that maintain the dominant ideology contributing to racial conflict by overemphasizing racial differences? It's something to think about.

Igneous rocks: What's the significance of this object? Don't ask me.

Juliet Juliet Juliet Juliet Juliet.

Kraft Cheese & Macaroni: It's good pasta. If you eat it while you're up late studying, you'll be filled with positive energy.

Limbaugh, Rush: If he supports women's rights, then I'm a fork. Either that or a liberal, witch-loving freak.

Mating habits: I dedicate this letter to my friend, Todd, in place of the article I never wrote.

No more military ban on gays! No more government control over women's bodies!

JULIET COOK

Oppression: Let us all remember that we are not oppressed in the same ways. There's no hope of unity until this fact is realized and accepted.

Power girl: Her breasts are bigger than her head!

Quiet hours: Since I'm unfortunate enough to still live in the dorms, I can comment on this firsthand. This year they're fining us for noise violations. I feel like I'm back in Girl Scout camp.

Redistricting: Sounds like some people are finally working hard to get things fixed up in this area, which is grand because why should we be discriminated against just because we're students?

Summer jobs: Where, oh where, can they be?

Toads: More specifically cane toads. You did read last week's column, right? Don't bite, just lick.

U is for Uncle Shelby. Everybody should read Uncle Shelby's "ABZ Book." (I plagiarized this one.)

Vomit: What I'm going to spew if I bite into an Easter egg with a runny center ever again.

Women! I think we should capitalize this word from now on, maybe follow it up with an exclamation point.

Xylophone: Well, I couldn't think of many words that started with X.

Yeah: Second to last letter!

Zinc: It just materialized into my brain. All I can say about this one is eat your vitamins.

Well, that's about all I have for you today. As I mentioned, this is my last column, but I would encourage some women to apply for this opinion columnist position in the summer or next fall.

Don't let the Bowling Green community forget about the issues that are relevant to women. And keep eating Cheerios -- one day someone will surely notice and give you a small gift. That someone might be me, because that's just the kind of girl I am.

Juliet Cook, former columnist for The News, has an amphibian-licking problem. She started off with toads, then moved to salamanders. Now she owns a pet store. Regardless, in the name of Macaroni & Cheese, we wish her well.

'Real world' exists at college

To the Editor:

I really don't know why I'm writing this. It's not due for any class. I don't have to rush at the last minute to come up with a topic and some fairly believable quotes, but I'm doing it.

Maybe it's because I want to say goodbye, or maybe it's because I'm being forced out of a way of life.

They say now I have to enter the "real world," but I'm not so sure there's anything real about it.

Have I just been living an illusion these past four years? Have the parties I've gone to, the beer I've drank, the classes I've gotten excited about and the amazing and diverse people I've met been an illusion?

Hell no. They're as real as the food I could never quite find enough of and the telephone bills that somehow managed to get paid just before the guys with yellow hats showed up to pull the plug.

No, these past four years have definitely not been an illusion, and I'm going to miss them. I'm going to miss sitting in the Union shooting the bull with whoever happens by.

I'm going to miss trying to relive my glory days on the basketball courts of the Rec Center.

And I'm going to miss being surrounded by excited, energetic people who are quick to call you their friend and even quicker to help you out when something goes wrong or a deadline comes a little too fast.

Maybe that's what college is all about.

Maybe college is simply about learning to meet and enjoy people of all races, sexes, colors and religions.

Or maybe there's something more. Something that's so subtle that you don't know it exists until it's gone. Something that tugs at your heart when summer ends and it's time for school to begin again. Something that teases you into extending your collegiate career to four and a half or five years. Something that nobody can quite put their finger on but something that everybody knows exists.

I'm not even going to pretend to know what that mysterious something is, but for four years, it's kept me excited about life at BGSU, and I know I'm going to miss it.

I could go on tracing my memories through the years and give advice to undergrads following in my footsteps, but they don't need my advice and would not listen to it if I gave it.

So, I guess I'm going to take the pride I carry for BGSU and go out and conquer the world.

But before I do, I want to say something that may or may not be true for the rest of the seniors graduating this May.

I believe BGSU was the ideal place to turn an obnoxious and scared young boy into a confident and enthusiastic man ready for whatever life has to offer.

So, goodbye, Bowling Green.

I love ya.

'Boys will be boys' not excuse for harassment

Recently, I was cutting my friend's hair. She and I were laughing about how I was so good that I could go into cosmetology if my business major didn't work out. I said I would be happy doing that.

Happiness is what counts. But as the night wore on, I realized that I wanted to make a difference, and that is what would make me happy. I wanted respect, and I was going to stick with business and earn respect. I would be happy earning respect. After all, isn't respect what all women want? Unfortunately, that's not what all women get.

In my History 206 class, I learned about the women's movement and how women really have "come a long way," as that cigarette advertisement claims. I want to make a difference. I want to help the women's movement. That's why I am pressing charges for sexual harassment. No, not sexual harassment by a professor but sexual harassment by a student in my calculus class.

This 20-year-old socially inept male started hitting on me the third day of class. (Actually, I don't want to call this student a male because calling him a male makes him human. This male is not human. He has no compassion, no guilt. I'll call him "It." Not only does it look like a jerk, it is a jerk; and not only is it a jerk, it knows it's a jerk; and not only does it know it's a jerk, it is proud of being a jerk. This irks me.)

At first, its little notes read, "Did you fall in love with me the first moment you saw me, or did it take you a couple of minutes?" When I responded with "I don't even know your name, but my name's Michelle," it promptly responded by giving me its address, full name, phone number and a personal note telling me that "chicks dig [it] because [it] rarely wears underwear, but when [it] does, its unders are something unusual."

I have to admit, its sheepish grin was cute, and I did think it was just being a guy by hitting on me. I had transferred from another school this semester, and I was also flattered and sort of pleased that this student had thought I was attractive (or else thought this would be one hell of a good joke).

Several more weeks into the class, I realized that this is no longer a joke. Its comments got worse. It would draw a part of the male body which I call the "male's 11th finger" on my books. I was offended. I thought, "This guy's sick."

Then when it asked me if my dad's a baker, because I "have nice buns," I realized this was getting annoying. I told it that if it wanted to get anywhere with me, it should try treating me like a lady.

It apologized for the baker remark and wrote that my father must be a thief, because who else would have stolen the stars and put them in my eyes. (Come on, how old is that line?) When it stole my watch off my bag during class and said, "Look, I have a watch like yours," I got angry.

From then on, I have been so paranoid about what he'll do next. It's affecting my work in the class. I hate going to class knowing it'll be there. I know many of you are saying "Don't sit beside it anymore," but I like sitting front and center. I learn more there. It's my right to sit there. By federal law (Title IX), I have a right to an education free of sexual harassment.

And very recently, it drew a picture of that "eleventh finger" on my book. I told it that if such an action occurs again, I will press sexual harassment charges. It got angry. It said, "You would do that, wouldn't you?" making me out to be "the bad guy."

It quickly erased the drawing in my book and ripped the page doing so. Sorry, buddy, you're the one who started all of this, and you're going to pay for this.

After class, I went to lunch and thought this through. I had been saving all of its notes all semester, just in case, God forbid, it would threaten to do something to me. I am a Christian. I believe that there is a higher form of punishment. I believe in forgiveness. I know everybody makes mistakes. I do. But remember, this guy felt no guilt.

It tried to make me out to be the bad guy. I realized threatening to report him would stop his attacks on me. But what about the other girls who have classes with him? What will happen when it hits the workplace?

It will think, "I've been reported against, but no one's pressed charges, no girl would do that to me." Maybe no girl would, but I can tell you that this woman will. And I did.

I have nothing against it; I've forgiven it. I'm a pretty passive person. I don't like to cause problems. I know if I told my parents, they'd just shrug and say, "Why bother? Boys will be boys." I'll tell you why. This is a matter of principle - a matter of human rights. I decided that I must press charges.

When I took the notes to the police, I could tell the officer was impressed that I was able to get this creep to sign his full name and address. (Thanks, creep.) The police informed me that although the notes were sexual, and he thought the creep was pretty sick, too, the letters were not threatening, and it's most likely to get probation or a fine.

I told the officer that I know the notes aren't threatening but that this is a matter of principle.

"Boys will be boys" cannot go on any longer.

I have earned respect, if not from other students, from myself. Now, I am happy, and I respect myself.

Clinton's popularity low

According to a report in Wednesday's USA Today, President William Jefferson Clinton has received the lowest approval ratings of any president in the last 40 years for the first quarter-year of a presidency.

If this opinion trend continues, two or three years from now America will have as many self-proclaimed Perot voters as it currently has people who swear they were at Woodstock.

A number of factors have combined to create President Clinton's current low approval ratings. The economy has not improved as quickly as some would hope. He was immediately thrust into two situations where setbacks were suffered (the attorney general crisis and the debate over gays in the military). The positive events of his presidency to date simply have not been very attention-getting.

The presidency was getting back on track, with support for his budget (if not for the stimulus package) when a number of national events diverted attention.

February and March brought us the return of the Rodney King trial, the bombing of the World Trade Center and the Waco standoff. The Vancouver summit brought President Clinton's action a bit more of the limelight but paled in comparison to the continuing world crises in other nations.

The health care reform plan is still in preparation, the national scholarship plan has similarly not been released yet and the Pentagon plan on the admission of gays and lesbians to the armed services is not due to be released until June 15, more than two months after today's "magic number" date.

The only thing which can be said to be clear about the first 100 days is that while Clinton has achieved a great deal during this time, there are dozens of other projects and promises which are still up in the air. There has been no great push to get everything through Congress in these first 100 days, and this fact is slowly getting attention.

Whether this represents a deliberate repudiation of the idea that those days which represent only one-fourteenth of a presidential term are the most important or if it simply shows that the projects which he is tackling are more complex than first assumed is also unclear. Whichever is the case, things are being accomplished, and it is only clear that these first 100 days are not an acceptable yardstick for judging the Clinton presidency.

The true measure of Clinton's first term will not even begin to show through until the most major issues he is facing are dealt with in Congress. There will be an inevitable showdown over the issue of gays in the military, and the health care proposal which first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton has been preparing with her plethora of advisers will likely also face opposition and questioning.

The initial Congressional support which exists for these programs and the success President Clinton has at moving these programs through the Congress will be key in determining his success.

Presidential support by the public is a notoriously fickle thing. Ronald Reagan's approval ratings dipped into the 30s in early 1983 but rose nearly 20 points in the following year. George Bush began his presidency with mid-40s but spent nearly half of his term with approval ratings over 70 percent.

His rapid decent into the 40s and 30s during 1992 is well-remembered and was the first harbinger of his defeat in November. All of this only proves that Clinton's current approval ratings, hovering around 50 percent, are not nearly as bad as they may seem nor are they any indication of what we will think of him as a nation next year or in 1996.

Perhaps the most important factor will be how much patience the American people are willing to show. Some of his proposals call for huge reforms and major changes in existing structures. Those proposals will not be accepted without a fight and without a great deal of debate and time passing.

If the American people grow tired of the debate and if they feel that too much time is passing with too little happening, President Clinton will face nearly as hard of a campaign three years from now as he did last year.

Sic Sic sign offensive due to sexist statement

To the Editor:

We would like to express our concern over a recent Sic Sic sign posted in the Union which read, "A women without a man is like a fish without water."

We found this sign to be very sexist, demeaning and unnecessary. Signs such as this only serve to perpetuate the patriarchal myth that women must be dependent on men. If an organization such as Sic Sic, which is supposed to promote school spirit, must resort to offensive slogans as a feeble attempt at humor, perhaps its members need to rethink their priorities.

As they have taken on the responsibility of being a voice for the BG campus, they must be sensitive to all students.

Stick to school spirit. Keep your negative opinions to yourself.

Eligibility for student financial aid expands

by Julie Tagliaferro administration reporter

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a series of stories on the federal financial aid changes for students.

More students will find they are eligible for financial aid this year and will have an easier time applying for it as a result of federal changes to the financial aid process.

As part of the higher education amendments passed in 1992 by Congress, requirements in the need analysis formula were altered, allowing more students to qualify for federal aid whether it be in the form of loans or grants, according to University Director of Financial Aid Conrad McRoberts.

McRoberts said all students should complete the Free Application for Federal Student Aid to determine their eligibility and because the process is now free.

However, if a student is applying for a state loan or grant, he or she must fill out a separate form, he said.

One of the significant changes in the need analysis formula for the 1993-94 academic year is that a student's home assets will no longer be considered in the calculation of the family's expected contribution to the student's college expenses, McRoberts said.

The amount of money a student and his or her family contributes toward educational expenses is now based on the family's total income and assets, household size and number of family members attending college, according to a University financial aid document.

In the past, a person's house was included in the assets, therefore it appeared that a student's family had more money than they actually had because of the value of the house, McRoberts said.

As a result of the changes, the worth of the house will not be considered in the contribution calculation causing more students to be eligible for aid, according to Brian Paskvan, assistant director of financial aid.

"The general outcome for the 1993-94 academic year is that it looks like more people will have eligibility overall," Paskvan said. "What form the eligibility will take has yet to be seen, [but] most likely it will be seen in loans."

Another change in the need analysis formula as a result of the higher education amendments is that when the earnings of a dependent student are taxed, the federal government will protect up to $1,750 of the student's yearly earnings, Paskvan said.

Any money remaining will only be taxed at 50 percent, McRoberts said.

However, McRoberts said independent students may see increased levels of taxation by the federal government.

"We may see some students without dependency whose income has not changed from one year to the next, but who may have less eligibility than before," he said.

In addition to the need analysis formula, the simple needs test now offers an increase in eligibility for students because it has expanded its potential pool of people who qualify, Paskvan said.

In order to qualify for aid through the test, the family's income had to be about $15,000 in the past. Now a person whose family earns up to $50,000 can still be considered for aid, he said.

However, Paskvan said the student must file the 1040 A or EZ tax form in order for the test to benefit him or her.

Poems express ethnicity

Students focus readings on international women

by Ginger Phillips
general assignment reporter

Friends, family and community members gathered together Thursday night to listen to the "Voices of International Women."

Students enrolled in Ethnic Studies 300 gave a poetry reading at Grounds for Thought, 174 S. Main St., last night at 7 p.m. to help others "take a peek into the minds of women."

The evening began with the lighting of a candle.

"The candle is our symbol of truth and knowledge that guides us through the unknown," one reader said.

The 16-member class then proceeded to share and reflect its thoughts on its selected poems about the struggles of women.

Brenda Scalzitti, senior liberal studies major, read "Freedom" by Sugiarti Siswadi. The poem expressed the way women are judged by their gender and marital roles and the hope that women would someday be judged for themselves.

"We too are peoples heroes. ... We shall be part of the foremost ranks," the poem read.

"I chose this poem because women have proven themselves to be equal and are opening new doors ... and someday all doors will be open to them," Scalzitti said.

Eileen Brady, a senior English major, chose a poem by June Jordan titled "Poem About My Rights," which Brady said emotionally moves her more every time she reads it. "Poem About My Rights" discusses the restrictions and roles women are expected to conform to by the standards of society.

"It perfectly illustrates my belief that rape is an act of political terrorism," Brady said.

When the readers finished, the candle was blown out and members of the audience were invited to share thoughts and poetry of their own.

The ethnic studies class, taught by Assistant Professor Lorna Gonsalves-Pinto, focuses on the experiences of women in selected regions.

Gonsalves-Pinto said the reading became a project of the class for two main reasons - to share its thoughts from class with the Bowling Green community and also to become familiar with poetry readings.

"Reading poetry allows us to gain perspective," she said. "Some of the students in class wanted to go back to their community and do something like this ... so I thought this would be good practice," she said.

The poetry reading may also be used for another purpose, she said.

"I would like to use it as a showcase," Gonsalves-Pinto said, explaining the reading was filmed for future use, to show other instructors and classes different ways of learning.

The College of Arts and Sciences funded the filming.

"They have been extremely supportive," Gonsalves-Pinto said.

Hispanic

Snyder's solutions include creating schools in which children feel wanted and teachers respect all students. She added that setting high expectations for Hispanic students will result in better academic results.

Marci Diaz, a junior elementary education major at the University, said she believes the best way to raise expectations is to broaden children's curricula.

"I think that multicultural education is an important issue for diversity awareness," she said. "The presentation highlighted a key concern in the Latino community. As a future educator, I find it important to take action now and help others to appreciate and help enhance their communities."

The lecture series is named in honor of Ornelas, a former Affirmative Action director and ethnic studies professor at the University. Snyder said she greatly admired Ornelas' work.

"He made a milestone. He fought for many years through hardwork and frustrations for one small step for change," she said.

Police blotter

□ A woman at a local apartment building called the police April 20 and said that her neighbors are "being obnoxious" and were out in the parking lot threatening to beat her up, police said.

□ Terry J. Aldrich, 23, Toledo, was cited for littering April 21. Aldrich reportedly vomited on the sidewalk on East Court Street. According to the police report, Aldrich said he did not see a problem with vomiting as it is a natural body function.

□ Brady A. Smith, 23, Beavercreek, was cited for disorderly conduct April 21. Police said Smith was allegedly "shooting muskrats in the ditch" in the parking lot of a local business.

□ Early last Thursday morning police received a call from a woman on the 800 block of Seventh Street complaining that the man in the apartment below her "sings at the top of his lungs off and on all hours of the day and night." She also reportedly said, "It's not enough that he has a bad voice, but [we] want him to stop singing at least by 11:00 p.m." The man told police he was singing because he was upset about some plumbing and would stop singing.

□ A Bowling Green woman reported Friday that she has been receiving harassing phone calls. The caller allegedly said, "This is Satan calling."

□ Katherine M. Schultz, 22, 930 E. Wooster St., was arrested for disorderly conduct with intoxication and with persistence Friday. Schultz was reportedly staggering down West Wooster Street. When the officer arrived he reportedly observed Schultz trying to cross Wooster. About a third of the way across she reportedly fell and crawled the rest of the way across the street. According to the police report, she had an odor of alcoholic beverages on her breath.

□ Several people were observed Sunday urinating over the balcony of an apartment in the 900 block of Thurston Avenue.

□ On Sunday, people from a party were reportedly urinating over the balcony of an apartment in the 800 block of Fifth Street.

□ A woman reported to police that she was at a local restaurant Monday when she saw a waitress with possible witchcraft symbols on her fingers.

Gambling

"It's not like it was in the old days. You can't beat people up or take property from them or the whole operation is going down," Rich said. "The bookie doesn't want you to know it, but he really has no leverage."

Apparently, all a bookie can do is cut off a delinquent bettor from betting altogether. Rich said he rarely allows someone to incur a debt as big as his friend's.

Vic, another of Rich's clients, said the negative emotional consequences that stem from becoming indebted to a bookie, are very difficult to deal with.

"It is degrading. I get nervous and find myself avoiding my bookie because I don't want him to ask me for money," Vic said. "I didn't go to Kent State to see my brother all last year because I owed a bookie three $3,000."

Despite the money and phone calls that flood Rich's residence, neither he nor his roommates or clientele seem nervous about getting caught.

"I'm careful and only take bets from people I know or are recommended through close friends," Rich said. "I'm not going to go around advertising the fact that I'm a bookie."

Authorities

Sports gambling cases are just as rare on campus, according to Director of Standards and Procedures Derrick Dickinson.

He said his office has not handled any referrals related to sports gambling, but added he was "shocked" to hear the extent of one local operation involving students.

"I had no inkling any [major sports gambling] was going on," Dickinson said. "If I had any information about something like this I would notify police. They should be called in."

Dickinson said the only sports gambling bust he remembers involved federal agents raiding a sports and card betting house on the east side of Toledo last year.

Greg Bakies, Student Legal Services managing attorney, said he has not been aware of sports gambling cases on campus.

"It may be that no complaints have been filed, so it would not be something students would need to consult me about," Bakies said. "I would imagine if a complaint was filed a detective could pretty easily put together a case."

Cost of graduate school rises nationally

College Press Service

PRINCETON, N.J. -- Tuition increases for public and private graduate schools ranged from 3 percent to 9 percent this year, according to Peterson's Annual Survey of Graduate Institutions.

Enrollment in graduate programs also is on the rise, the survey found.

The average cost, which includes tuition and fees, rose the most at public institutions. State residents paid an average of $2,445 for the academic year, an 8.2 percent increase over last year, and out-of-state residents paid an average of $5,715, or 9.1 percent more from last year.

Graduate students at private institutions paid $6,996, a 3.1 percent increase.

"Considering the effects of our nation's lingering recession on both public and private sources of educational funding, these increases might be considered quite reasonable," said Peter Hegener, president of Peterson's Guides.

Enrollment in graduate programs for the 1991-1992 year was 1.3 million, up 3.2 percent from 1.2 million in 1990-1991. Only dentistry and agricultural sciences had a decline in enrollment, the survey found.

Spanish official to visit Toledo

by Jennifer Willis
contributing writer

The Spanish ambassador to the United States, Jaime de Ojeda, will be visiting the Toledo area and meeting with students May 25 and 26.

On Tuesday May 25, the ambassador will speak at a banquet and reception given by the Association of Two Toledos at the Toledo Country Club. The following day, the ambassador will be touring the Toledo Museum of Art and the University of Toledo.

Students from Spain and students of Spanish will be able to meet the ambassador during his visit to the Toledo Museum of Art. Students will also have an opportunity to be photographed with de Ojeda.

"Copies of the photographs will be sent back to the hometowns of the students from Spain so [the pictures] can be published in their local newspapers," said Elizabeth Sluhan of the Association of Two Toledos. "It will be a great honor for those students."

The ambassador will be touring the archival Spanish material at the University of Toledo's Carlson Library. According to Sluhan, the library has been gathering this material for 31 years.

"We are very excited for this visit," Sluhan said. "The very first thing we thought of was the students. We wanted to try to focus the visit around them."

De Ojeda will be visiting Toledo during the annual observance of the sister-city tie between Toledo and the city of Toledo, Spain. May 25 is observed as the "Day of Two Toledos," according to the Association of Two Toledos. This tie was the first official tie between sister cities in the United States. The cities have had an official since 1931.

"The sister-city relationship between the two Toledos [has] involved thousands of people in both Toledos," stated a report from the Association of Two Toledos. "The national governments of both Spain and the United States look with great favor on sister city relationships. [They] represent international diplomacy at its best, for they are based on pure friendship - they are not characterized by either economic or political considerations."

Scholarships between the two cities have also been established, according to information from the Association. The scholarships are offered to students in Toledo Spain for a year's academic study at the University of Toledo in Ohio. Similar scholarships have also been established for students from the University of Toledo to study in Toledo, Spain for a year.

Jaime de Ojeda was appointed ambassador to the United States in April 1990. He is a first lieutenant in the Marine Corps Reserve and is the ambassador permanent on the North Atlantic Council for Spain. He has also written many political and military articles for Spanish periodicals.

Students wishing to attend the banquet should contact the Association of Two Toledos at 874-8776. The cost of the banquet will be $25.

Blown fuse cause of sewage leak

The Associated Press

TOLEDO - A blown fuse caused the discharge of millions of gallons of raw sewage into a Lake Erie tributary early this month, a city official said Thursday.

Paul Munn, commissioner of water reclamation, said an investigation also concluded that a warning signal failed because of a computer programming error.

"You can expect fuses like that to blow from time to time, but what should have happened is that a backup alarm should have worked properly," Munn said.

Munn said the blown fuse at the Reynolds area pumping station set off a series of events that led to the discharge of more than 11 million gallons of raw sewage April 4 into the already polluted Swan Creek.

The 225-amp fuse allows power to flow to the transformer, which controls the pumps and primary communication system at the station.

When the fuse blew, it should have alerted a computer that monitors the sewer system. But because of a glitch, the computer showed problems at a North Toledo pumping station instead of at the Reynolds station.

Workers didn't discover the problem at the Reynolds station until 12 hours after the problem started. By then, the station was flooded and equipment was damaged.

Clinton plans next 100 days

by John King
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- President Clinton hit the 100-day mark Thursday with mixed reviews but a common theme: uncertainty. A better benchmark comes in another hundred days, when the fate of Clinton's ambitious agenda will be much clearer.

"I learned that things are not going to change quite as fast as I wanted them to," Clinton said Thursday. "But this country has some serious problems and we're going to have to get everybody serious about dealing with the problems."

The president is putting the finishing touches on a dramatic health care reform package and his national service program, with campaign finance, welfare and education reform initiatives to follow. And, come July, Clinton faces his deadline for a plan allowing homosexuals to serve openly in the military.

All this while Congress turns Clinton's economic blueprint into an economic program.

"That's a real action period," says White House Communications Director George Stephanopoulos. "You can't really judge until that is done."

Or, as Senate Republican leader Bob Dole puts it, "We start shooting real bullets now."

"It's important for the administration to get back its focus on the economy and health care," said Democratic pollster Celinda Lake.

Those issues no doubt will be the major focus of a White House that says it learned a lesson watching Senate Republicans kill Clinton's jobs bill.

In the next hundred days, he will spend more time courting Republicans and more time trying to rally public support for his cornerstone initiatives.

Clinton must also deliver on promises to take tougher steps against Serbian aggressors in the former Yugoslavia and to offer Russia an additional $1.8 billion aid package.

"For a president, having to do too much at once is a fact of life," said Republican Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana. "He has to be both the president of the United States and the president of the free world."

Lugar is a minority among Republicans: He credits Clinton with a "very vigorous 100 days" and believes even better days lie ahead.

"I would think in the second hundred days that the president will move much more in the direction of building bipartisan coalitions," Lugar said. "And if he does, he is going to have a great deal of success."

Democratic Sen. John Breaux of Louisiana said he already sees evidence of that on health care, "the next big issue."

Evaluation of gunman begun

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS, N.M. -- An Ohio man accused of shooting at truck drivers and other motorists on Interstate 25 with a high-powered rifle is undergoing a psychiatric evaluation, his attorney said.

Clinton Quillen, 54, of Canton, Ohio, was arrested by state police on April 20. He is charged with two counts of attempted murder, one count of aggravated assault on a police officer and four counts of criminal damage to property.

According to state police, Quillen told officers he fired at passing vehicles because they did not stop after Quillen's car left the interstate and crashed near Villanueva, N.M.

Two truck drivers were injured by bullets fired at their vehicles. Police said gunfire hit at least three other vehicles, including a state police patrol car.

Owens-Illinois returns to court for asbestos case

by Herb Jackson
The Associated Press

TRENTON, N.J. -- An appeals court on Thursday sent a record-setting asbestos case back to trial court for a trial on whether manufacturer Owens-Illinois knew about the product's dangers and deceived its insurers.

A spokesman for the Toledo-based company, John Hoff, said he was confident of victory "based on our experience in litigation on these issues in the past."

A 1990 ruling by state Superior Court Judge Erminie L. Conley in New Brunswick said five insurance companies were liable for $960 million in coverage for claims stemming from Owens-Illinois' manufacture of an asbestos product from 1948 to 1958. It was the largest liability judgment ever in New Jersey.

The insurers -- United Insurance Co., Owens Insurance Ltd., General Reinsurance Corp., Allstate Insurance Co. and Cigna Reinsurance Co. -- argued they should not have to pay because their coverage started in 1977, 19 years after Owens-Illinois stopped making asbestos.

But the appeals court agreed with Conley's finding of a "continuous trigger theory" that coverage was not limited to when a person was exposed to the product. Asbestos exposure can take up to 20 years to affect health.

The three-judge appellate panel unanimously ruled several other questions deserve a full trial, however.

These include whether Owens-Illinois "expected or intended" the dangers of asbestos, which would make the company liable and not the insurers; whether it misrepresented its past involvement with asbestos when seeking coverage from new insurers; and whether insurers waived their right to claim they were defrauded by continuing to write coverage after learning about asbestos claims.

"It's not enough to find Owens-Illinois made a mistake, and made or sold a product that turned out to be hazardous," said Andrew T. Berry, the company's lawyer in Newark. "The court would have to find Owens-Illinois acted intentionally to hurt and kill people. We've regularly been winning cases at [other] trials on a much easier burden of proof for the plaintiff."

About 54,000 claims are pending against Owens-Illinois, many involving people exposed while installing asbestos. Hoff said that in the 1950s, the company had researched potential health risks from asbestos and changed its safety practices to protect employees.

"Nobody thought at that point about the next step, the installers," he said.

He said the company has been paying claims from its own funds with the belief reimbursement would ultimately come from the insurers.

Drug use high among kids

Ohio survey suggests prevention should start in preschool

by Sonja Barisic
The Associated Press

CINCINNATI -- Some fourth-graders who took part in a survey of Ohio students admitted they used inhalants within the past year to get high, according to a survey released Thursday.

The survey by the Parents' Resource Institute for Drug Education said 8 percent of more than 90,000 fourth-graders who responded said they had used inhalants in the past year. Another 12.3 percent said they had a friend who has used inhalants.

"This study suggests a need for an inhalant information campaign in Ohio," said Thomas Gleaton, president of the Atlanta-based anti-drug group, which is holding a conference this week in Cincinnati.

About 10,000 youths and adults from around the country and abroad are attending.

"Progress can be made in the classroom, but parents, shopkeepers and public officials also have an important role in monitoring children's access to problem products," Gleaton said.

Inhalants include typewriter correction fluid, glue, nail polish, paint thinner, aerosols and gasoline. When sniffed, they can produce dizziness. The practice can depress the central nervous system and damage other organs.

PRIDE conducted the survey last fall. Every Ohio district was asked to participate; about 60 percent responded.

Of the 262,867 public- and private-school students who answered the survey questionnaire, 90,657 were in fourth grade; 90,211 were in sixth grade; and 81,999 were in eighth grade.

There was no margin of error because the survey was a population study rather than a random sample.

The fourth-graders were asked whether they used cigarettes, smokeless tobacco, beer, wine coolers, liquor, marijuana or inhalants.

Sixth- and eighth-graders were asked if they used cigarettes, beer, wine coolers, liquor, marijuana, cocaine and crack, uppers, downers, inhalants or hallucinogens.

Luceille Fleming, director of the Ohio Department of Alcohol and Drug Addiction Services, said this is the first survey of its kind in Ohio.

The results "reinforce one of Ohio's primary thrusts, which is to begin prevention at the preschool level," she said. "Believe me, you cannot start too young."

While 7.9 percent of the fourth-graders reported using inhalants in the past year, that number fell to 5.8 percent among eighth-graders. Gleaton said that may be because older students have access to other drugs.

Among all drugs studied, alcohol and tobacco were most commonly used.

One in 10 fourth-graders drank beer at least once in the past year. That rate doubled by the sixth grade and quadrupled by the eighth grade.

Crew is accused of gay prejudice

The Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas — An American Airlines flight crew asked that all the pillows and blankets be replaced after participants in the Washington gay-rights march rode on board.

American called the report "outrageous, objectionable and unfortunate" and said it would investigate.

"This is of grave, grave concern," airline spokesman Al Becker said.

The linen change was requested when the jet arrived at Dallas-Fort Worth Airport on Monday, the day after the march, on its way to California. The airline's internal report said: "inbd crew req complete chg of all pillows blankets due gay rights activists group onbd."

"There was obviously an extremely homophobic crew and a captain that needs some good AIDS education," said David Taffet, vice president of the Dallas Gay and Lesbian Alliance. "Or maybe they were just afraid that the oncoming passengers would catch homosexuality from pillows and blankets."

Becker said the lead flight attendant claimed the request was made because there were not enough blankets on board and some were used to mop up a spill in the rear of the plane.

Service plan outlined

Federal government may pay for college loans

by Ron Fournier
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Students who perform community service could work off $13,000 in college tuition, get a modest stipend and qualify for health care and day care benefits under President Clinton's national service program.

According to a White House outline of the program obtained by The Associated Press, the plan to be unveiled today also includes a more controversial component to make higher education affordable: a $25 billion federal government takeover of the college loan program.

Clinton said during the campaign he would like to have the IRS collect loan money from students, but Deputy Education Secretary Madeline Kunin said Thursday that the Department of Education will hire private contractors to collect debts for now.

Neither the community service program nor the loan overhaul would be fully in place before 1997, but Clinton promised last month that the program eventually will "change America forever and for the better."

Clinton sketched the broad outlines of this program March 1. He scheduled a speech Friday to students at the University of New Orleans to promote it now that draft legislation is ready to send to Congress.

Some 150,000 students would join the National Service Corps by 1997, when the program is fully phased in. Students could work full-time for up to two years, earning $6,500 a year in tuition credits. Payments would be made directly to schools.

The $13,000 is substantially

Clinton promised last month that the [national service] program eventually will "change America forever and for the better."

less than the average cost of tuition but equals the average debt among graduating students.

Students, age 16 or older, could serve after high school and before, during or after they attend a college, university or vocational school.

The White House outline also says participants "without access to health insurance will receive health coverage." Federal money would pay up to 85 percent of these costs.

Participants also could get "child care assistance, if needed," the document says.

The total cost of the health care and day care benefits was not specified in the outline.

The federal government would pay a portion of the students' stipends. The outline says the government would pay no more than 85 percent of the annual stipend now given to Volunteers in Service To America, or VISTA, workers. In Washington, that would amount to less than $600 a month, although the figure would vary from city to city.

Community service programs would be allowed to double that amount using their own money.

To administer the National Service Trust Program, Clinton wants to merge two existing federal agencies, the Commission on National and Community Service and ACTION, which runs VISTA and other domestic volunteer programs.

The new entity would be called the Corporation for National Service. The corporation would have an 11-member board of directors appointed by Clinton and confirmed by the Senate.

Clinton has already budgeted $9.5 billion over five years for the program, with only $98 million set aside for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

Programs employing community service workers would get money one of two ways: through a state commission or from the national corporation. States would be allocated money based on their population and on a competitive basis.

Under the college loan program, the government will begin borrowing money and lending it to students with colleges and universities acting as agents. Now, students borrow directly from banks, but Kunin said students would pay an interest rate as much as a half percent lower with the direct approach.

The takeover would begin July 1, 1994. Four percent of student loans would come from the government in the first year, 25 percent in the second year and 60 percent in the third.

By the 1997-98 school year, the government would make all loans to the 8,000 colleges, universities and vocational education schools at a cost of $25 million, congressional and administration sources said.

Senators delay baseball laws

by Katherine Rizzo
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Senators have been balking at the idea of tampering with the national pastime, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum admitted Thursday.

Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, has been trying to kill Major League Baseball's special exemption from antitrust laws.

His crusade seemed to be picking up steam after a Senate hearing last year and a House hearing earlier this year. Metzenbaum had been predicting quick action this spring, beginning with a Senate Judiciary Hearing in March.

But Metzenbaum said he has not scheduled the hearing because he does not have enough support to get the bill out of committee.

"I like to win," he said. "A number of members of the Judiciary Committee are uncertain. As soon as I know we've got the votes, we're going to go."

He said he hoped the combined forces of lawmakers, city officials, consumer groups, the players' union and fans would sway fence-sitting senators into putting baseball on the same legal footing as other professional sports.

Sens. Bob Graham, D-Fla., and Connie Mack, R-Fla., have gathered anti-exemption interest groups together to form a coalition, which met for the first time Thursday.

Don Fehr of the Major League Baseball Player's Association said the players' organization supported many efforts over the years to strip baseball of its antitrust exemption. But this year is different, he said.

"This is the most sustained, most vigorous and most likely to succeed effort that's come down the road," Fehr said.

"This is a national movement, broadly based," said Graham. "That was not true a month ago."

Owners of the 28 Major League ballclubs are immune from antitrust lawsuits.

Other major professional sports, such as football and basketball, are subject to the law, but the Supreme Court granted an exemption to baseball in 1922 and reaffirmed it in 1972, leaving any change up to Congress.

Major League Baseball contends that the exemption is good for the game because it protects cities from high-stakes bidding wars to move the clubs. The owners also warn that revoking the exemption could kill the minor leagues.

But the groups in the anti-exemption coalition said taxpayers and baseball fans would be better off without it, since the exemption gives owners the power to restrict expansion, veto moves by teams that want to relocate, and threaten cities with the loss of their teams unless taxpayers give them the facilities they want.

They also decry the owners' ability to restrict where baseball games are broadcast.

"Fans pay more to watch less," said Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla. "Owners insure that the big league clubs don't enter each other's market and compete on price, number of games available or programming quality."

Bill seeks to obtain tax credits for businesses with day care

by John Chalfant
The Associated Press

COLUMBUS — A Republican Senate leader said Thursday the state should give tax credits to businesses that provide day care for children of their employees.

Sen. Eugene Watts of Galloway introduced a bill that would authorize the credits to help resolve what he called a statewide crisis in day care.

"Close to 60 percent of the women in the work force in Ohio have children under the age of six. The vast majority of them need day care," said Watts, the third-ranking Senate Republican leader.

"The truth is, not enough options exist," he said at a news conference. "What we see all across the state of Ohio are huge waiting lists for openings in high-quality, affordable day care."

Watts' bill would allow a 100 percent non-refundable tax credit to corporations that establish workplace day care centers.

The bill would allow businesses to write off day care start-up costs on their corporate franchise or state personal income taxes. Such expenses could include construction, renovation, kitchen appliances, furniture and other equipment.

Watts' proposal also would grant a tax credit equaling 50 percent of an employer's costs of providing services at a qualified day care center within a reasonable distance of the workplace.

"What this does will provide employers with the incentive to reimburse their employees directly ... for day care costs," he said.

There was no estimate of how much money the state would lose by granting the tax breaks.

Watts said a ballpark figure, based partly on the experience of a Florida program that covers center start-up costs, would be $10 million a year.

"We know that this lack of day care services and facilities causes parents frequently to lose time at work," he said. That leads to a loss of wages and tax dollars.

The Ohio Department of Taxation said it had not seen the bill and could not comment.

Oberlin students post signs of alleged rapist

The Associated Press

OBERLIN, Ohio — Officials at Oberlin College on Thursday denounced a group that posted signs accusing a student of rape and called a campus meeting to discuss sexual harassment.

At the meeting, Patrick Penn, dean of student life on the 2,800-student campus 35 miles southwest of Cleveland, called the posters reprehensible and outlined campus policy for reporting alleged sexual assaults. More than 300 people attended the meeting.

The forum was arranged after a group calling itself "Take Back the Night" posted signs that identified the freshman as the "rapist of the month." The posters that appeared April 21 were taken down by employees of the four-year liberal arts school.

The freshman, whose name has not been released by the school, has not been charged in any criminal complaint and is not under investigation by police or campus security.

The man said in a telephone interview Thursday that he had not raped anyone and felt the poster was either a hoax or a case of mistaken identity.

"I can't think of anybody who has a grudge," he said. "I'm not the type of person people get passionate about. I'm a square kind of guy."

But he had sympathy for the alleged victim.

"There might be someone out there who has been raped," he said. "That person is going through tremendous trauma. She needs to at least privately go to a counselor and get her life squared away."

The poster identified the freshman by name and said the alleged rape victim was in anguish and did not want to file a complaint through a system it described as anti-women.

College spokesman Alan Moran said officials did not know who posted the signs.

There have been three rapes on campus since 1989, all involving acquaintances of the victims, according to crime figures provided by the college.

Clare Cygan, director of the Rape Crisis Center of Lorain County, said a rape victim must be supported, "but to take it that far is disturbing."

The New York office of the Legal Defense and Education Fund of the National Organization for Women declined to comment on the issue.

Couple sues photographer

by Patrick McDowell
The Associated Press

PARIS -- An aging couple took photographer Robert Doisneau to court Wednesday, claiming he violated their privacy by snapping their passionate kiss 43 years ago in a photo that has become world famous.

Denise and Jean-Louis Laverne, both retired printers in their 60s, claim that they are the lovers in Doisneau's 1950 photo, "Le Baiser de l'Hotel de Ville" (The Kiss at City Hall).

Doisneau's lawyer, Jacques Marchand, said the couple in the picture were hired actors. The actress, Francoise Bornet, filed a suit of her own against Doisneau for refusing to pay her part of the photograph's earnings.

Both suits were heard Wednesday. The civil court said it would rule June 2.

The Lavernes insist they are the couple captured in a seemingly spontaneous, passionate kiss amid a crowd of indifferent strollers outside Paris City Hall. They believe they were out shopping when the photo was taken. They married three months later.

The black-and-white shot has been reproduced on posters, postcards and T-shirts. The Lavernes say they first saw it in 1988.

They seek $100,000 in damages, but claim the bigger issue is recognition of their young love.

Bornet is suing Doisneau for $20,000 and a percentage of the sales. She says she would have remained anonymous but for the Lavernes' claims.

Her male partner, Jacques Cartaud, was paid 500 francs by Doisneau and never shared the money with her, she said. Cartaud is not a party to her suit.

In 1950, the average French worker received perhaps 5,000 francs a week.

Marchand said it appeared to be a contractual dispute between Doisneau and Bornet, and so not a matter for this court. He also said obscure models had no right to claim a share of worldwide proceeds in such a case.

Mrs. Laverne said last winter, "They say there is magic in that photo. That photo is a testament to our youth, and we regret not being recognized."

The couple say that they first spotted the picture on a magazine cover on their 38th wedding anniversary in 1988, asked to meet the photographer and finally had lunch with Doisneau in January 1990. They say his entourage later denied in interviews that the famous kiss belonged to them.

Lawyers for the Rapho photo agency, which owns the picture rights, said Doisneau did not want to disappoint the couple and let them believe their dream. Rapho could be held liable for damages if Doisneau loses the case.

National and World Briefs

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- In a revolutionary change for the U.S. military, Defense Secretary Les Aspin ordered the service chiefs Wednesday to drop restrictions on women flying combat missions and serving aboard most Navy warships.

"The steps we are taking today are historic," Aspin said at a news conference attended by the chiefs of the Air Force, Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

The policy change means that within a year, dozens of women could be flying Navy and Air Force fighter jets and piloting the Army's most lethal attack choppers.

Permitting women to serve aboard warships will require congressional action. Aspin said he had instructed Adm. Frank Kelso, the chief of naval operations, to prepare the groundwork for a legislative proposal to end this prohibition.

WASHINGTON -- Attorney General Janet Reno said Wednesday she considered every option to end the Waco standoff, even tunneling into the Branch Davidian compound, but the failed tear-gas attack seemed the only viable plan.

"Nobody will ever know what the right answer was," Reno told a congressional committee looking into the disaster.

Before the assault, she said she repeatedly asked the experts: "Why now? Why not wait?" And every day since, she said, she has wondered what she might have done differently.

Reno was the first witness before the House Judiciary Committee in a sometimes confrontational day of second-guessing about the operation that ended after 51 days in flames and the deaths of David Koresh, his followers and their children.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina -- Facing threats of Serb retaliation against their peacekeepers, Western military brass on Wednesday demanded a strategy be devised to pacify Bosnia before considering air strikes.

A Bosnian Serb commander, apparently playing on fears that military intervention would put U.N. peacekeepers at risk, summoned a British army officer and warned him that British troops would be shelled immediately if NATO bombs Bosnian Serb positions.

While politicians spoke increasingly of using air strikes to try to force the Serbs to settle a war that has left more than 134,000 people dead and missing, military officers pressed them to focus on long-term strategy.

"We need to have the clearest guidance on what [the action] is seeking to achieve," British Field Marshal Richard Vincent, NATO's top military officer, said after an alliance meeting in Brussels.

WASHINGTON -- Despite sharp divisions in Congress and qualms at the Pentagon, President Clinton said Wednesday he is determined to take tougher action to end the war in Bosnia.

Aides said he probably would decide on new steps by the week's end.

"I will decide what I think the right thing to do is, and then see if I can persuade the Congress and the allies to go along," Clinton said.

Frustrated by the refusal of Bosnian Serbs to end a war that has left 134,000 people dead or missing, Clinton is considering air strikes against Serb artillery sites and exempting Bosnian Muslims from a United Nations arms embargo.

MOSCOW -- Boris Yeltsin's opponents went on the attack Wednesday to undermine his referendum victory, accusing the president of making a secret deal with the United States to punish Serbia.

Hard-line lawmakers also created a special commission to investigate allegations of corruption within the Yeltsin administration, and they attacked his plan to convert state industries to private ownership.

The sniping confirmed predictions that Sunday's referendum would not end Russia's power struggle, but only intensify it -- at least until Yeltsin can push through a new constitution.

Inmates used prison manual

The Associated Press

PORTSMOUTH, Ohio -- Lt. Gov. Mike DeWine said concessions state negotiators made during a standoff at a Lucasville prison did not amount to a victory for the inmates.

"I don't look at this as the prisoners winning anything," DeWine said in an interview published Thursday in The Portsmouth Daily Times.

"If you want to say the state should never negotiate, then you have to say you are willing to lose those lives, willing to let them die," DeWine said, referring to the eight guards taken hostage.

"No one should take this as an indication that the same action would be taken if there was a next time," DeWine said.

Nine inmates and one guard died during the 11-day standoff at the Southern Ohio Correctional Facility, which began April 11.

An FBI supervisor who was part of the negotiating team said that the inmates made bombs and fashioned booby traps as a defense in case the prison was stormed.

"They used whatever they had available to make explosives -- match heads, bits of broken glass," Allen Tolen, the FBI's Cincinnati agent in charge, said Wednesday. "They were very clever."

The Dayton Daily News reported Thursday that one of the key inmates in the standoff had a copy of the negotiating manual used by state officials.

Redistricting

city council members, a vote cast in a smaller ward has more effect than one cast in a larger ward.

"So, theoretically, a Ward One person could move to Ward Three and increase his voting power," Fleming said.

Bakies said he believes this creates an imbalance in voting power.

"If I live in Ward One and he lives in Ward Three, his power to elect his representative is much greater than my power to elect my representative," he said.

The petition asks the court to order the city to create wards of equal population and declare any future elections under the current system void.

Officials at the Wood County Board of Elections could not be reached to comment on how such an order would affect the city elections in November. All four ward seats will be on the ballot.

City Attorney Michael Marsh said he will likely fight the request by arguing the city is not required to use U.S. Bureau of the Census counts of residents when drawing its ward boundaries. Marsh said he will argue cities are allowed to devise their own criteria for determining which people are residents for districting purposes.

"There is a misconception among students that there is a law that says U.S. census data be used and that has never been the law," Marsh said.

He said contrary to census figures, most University students do not live in Bowling Green year-round. Because of this, the city's ward map is based on numbers of registered voters.

Bakies said he believes this system is illegal.

"The Equal Protection Clause requires that you use population figures, and the U.S. Supreme Court has specifically prohibited cities from using registered voters as a measure of population," he said.

The petition will be filed in the names of Kim Walker and Rodney Wichman, members of the SLS board of directors.

Regents

She said higher education needs to be committed to supplying the needs of all the incoming students by broadening the curriculum.

She said only 18 percent of the workforce by the year 2000 will consist of white males, and the rest will be comprised of a combination of women, immigrants and minorities. She added that universities have to give their best efforts to attract and obtain minority students.

Hairston said over the last five years many adults entered into higher education on a part-time basis to obtain or retain jobs. She added it is more costly to serve these students than those fresh out of high school because those fresh out of high school are more current with a basic education.

Hairston said Ohio's state budget, like any other state budget, is being increasingly pressed by federalism and is bearing the load of an overtaxed health care system which is causing the cuts in higher education.

"More and more students want a higher education, but there are fewer and fewer dollars to support it."

"There has been a drop of $272 million in the last three years showing a loss of 22 percent in per student funding," Hairston said. "Higher education is sustaining losses of millions of dollars in overall student funding."

Hairston said the public has voiced its concern for a quality education and how faculty spend their time. She said faculty are seen as researchers and scholars who work for the prestige of the university, which has resulted in a lack of attention toward students.

Hairston said the Ohio education system, when compared nationally, is one of the most effective and efficient in the country.

Hairston said on the request from Gov. George Voinovich, the Board of Regents examined higher education to find out how it could be made more effective and efficient.

She said three challenges were addressed: how higher education can be made affordable, how it can be made accessible to all and how research can be stimulated.

Hairston said the board reached conclusions which consisted of focusing more on students, the achievement of students in the retention and completion of material and to make the cost of a higher education no longer a deterrent.

Hairston said Ohio has a unique system of higher education and the system must continue to be served, but at the same time governance should be excluded at state colleges and universities.

BG to face Redskins

by Andy Dugan
sports writer

On Saturday, the men's and women's track teams travel in opposite directions to challenge a couple of the best teams in the Mid-American Conference.

The men will travel to Oxford, Ohio for a dual meet with Miami University. Men's coach Sid Sink recognizes the greatness of a Redskins' challenge.

Sink

"They're tough," Sink said, "Right now, they look like they're the best team in the MAC. We've got some events we plan on scoring well in, so we should collect a fair amount of points. If we don't beat them, it'll be really close."

Sink stated that one of the goals of the team will be to have the Redskins push BG in their weaker events, in hopes that the season's best times are the end result.

"They'll be better than us in a lot of events," Sink said. "We've just got to do our best. Each man needs to go after the Miami guys and get a good time."

Sink also noted that, except for top sprint hurdler Scott Thompson, the entire team will be ready to compete. Thompson won't be participating due to a stress fracture. Sink stated his optimism.

"The weather should be very nice, so we're looking for some of the season's best times," Sink said. "Everyone is ready to go."

The women will travel to the University of Toledo to participate in the Toledo Invitational. Earlier this season, the Falcons lost to the Rockets in their dual meet. Now, they have another chance to come out on top.

Although the number of teams at the meet were unavailable at press time, here is the Falcons' tentative line up for the meet:

Gretchen Smith will represent BG in the heptathlon; Nikki Lessig and Jenny Johnson in the shot put; Ruth Ristvey in the javelin; Cheri Triner, Kristin Gaddis, and Suzanne Isco in the 5000 meter run; Julie Shade, Leslie Moorman, Brooke Shelley, and Benita Thomas in the 400 meter relay; Lessig, Johnson, and Ristvey in the discus; Jill Strawser, Tracey Losi, and Melissa LaRouche in the 1500 meter run; and Jane Moeller and Amy Bucholz will be in the 100 meter hurdles.

In the 400 meter dash as well as the 100, Thomas will be the lone Falcon; LaRouche, and Amy Dolph will be in the 800; Moorman, Moeller, Karen Bollins, Patience Jones, Shannon Garman, and Val DeVitt will be in the 400 hurdles; Shade and Shelley in the 200 meter dash; Strawser and Losi in the 3000 meter run; and the foursome of Shade, Moeller, Moorman, and Thomas will combine for the 1600 meter relay.

The meet begins Saturday at 10 a.m. at the University of Toledo.

Tennis teams face tourneys

The Mid-American Conference Tennis Championships are this weekend, as the men travel to Toledo, and the women journey to Western Michigan.

The men begin action today at 9 a.m., while the women begin their second day of action today at 10 a.m.

The men finished the season at 3-12 overall and 3-3 in the MAC, good enough for a fourth place finish. Bob Zumph leads BG's singles performers with a 5-1 MAC record and a 13-9 overall mark.

Tracey Dwire adds ample support with a 3-1 MAC record, while Karl Crnkovich captured three wins in the conference and possesses a 9-8 overall record.

In doubles action, Zumph and Andrew Bronser teamed up for an 8-5 overall ledger, with a 5-1 record in the MAC.

The women concluded the season at 9-10 overall and 0-6 in the league. Freshman Julie Assenheimer finished the year at 16-8 overall and 3-3 in the MAC at the #5 singles slot. Freshman Patty Bank garnered 21 wins and only six losses overall at the #6 singles slot. She was 3-3 in the MAC.

In doubles action, Assenheimer and Kassie Hembree teamed up for a 17-6 record at the #3 doubles slot. They ended the season at 3-3 in the MAC.

Men's finals action begins on Sunday at 9 a.m., while the women's finals begin at 10 a.m. on Saturday.

Blue Jays crush Royals

The Associated Press

TORONTO -- Juan Guzman (3-0) pitched a five-hitter for his first career shutout and John Olerud had a career-high five hits Thursday as the Toronto Blue Jays routed the Kansas City Royals 8-0.

Guzman (3-0) struck out nine and walked four in his first complete game since last May 10.

Olerud doubled twice, scored two runs and increased his American League-leading batting average to .455. His previous best was four hits against the Minnesota Twins on Sept. 4, 1992. He became the first Toronto batter to get five hits since George Bell on Sept. 24, 1990, against the Milwaukee Brewers.

Prairie Bayou is favored Finks treated for cancer

The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. -- A pill with the No. 5 on it was just what the doctor ordered for Kentucky Derby favorite Prairie Bayou.

"It gives me peace of mind, but I'm sure Prairie Bayou doesn't know the difference," trainer Tom Bohannon after Prairie Bayou drew the No. 5 post in a field of 19 3-year-olds for the 1-mile Derby Saturday at Churchill Downs.

Prairie Bayou likes to come from off the pace, and Mike Smith now will be able to take the gelding back without any jockeying or jostling in the long run to the first turn.

Prairie Bayou was made the early 5-2 pick. In his last two starts, the Loblolly Stable gelding won the Jim Beam and the Blue Grass. He also won twice at Churchill Downs as a 2-year-old.

The last gelding to go off the favorite in the Derby was Rock-hill Native, fifth in 1980. Seven geldings have won the race, but none since Clyde Van Dusen in 1929.

A post-time favorite has not won the Derby since Spectacular Bid in 1979.

Personal Hope, the Santa Anita Derby winner, was the early second choice at 7-2, followed by Storm Tower, Wood Memorial winner, at 9-2. Both colts like to run on or near the pace.

Personal Hope, ridden by Gary Stevens, drew No. 7, also a favorable post, but Storm Tower drew the rail. That means the speedy colt will have to stand in the gate while the 18 other starters are loaded and that Rick Wilson will have to gun the colt at the break so he won't be shuffled back.

Bohannon and owner John Ed Anthony considered running a Loblolly Stable entry of Prairie Bayou and Marked Tree. They decided to hold Marked Tree for either the Illinois Derby May 8 or the Preakness May 15.

There is one entry Allen Paulson's Diazo and Corby in the largest Derby field since the limit of 20 ran in 1984 when Swale won.

Bill Shoemaker will make his debut as a Derby trainer with Diazo. His last win was on Ferdinand in 1986, when at 54, he became the oldest winning Derby jockey.

Shoemaker appeared at the Downs Thursday for the first time since he last rode in the Derby in 1988.

The Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS -- Jim Finks, who helped build the first winning teams in the history of the New Orleans Saints and was nearly elected NFL commissioner in 1989, is being treated for cancer, the team announced Thursday.

The 65-year-old Finks, the Saints' president, had complained about respiratory problems for several weeks. He was hospitalized Monday after the NFL draft.

Three days of tests revealed the cancer, Saints owner Tom Benson said during a news conference.

The team said it did not have details of where the cancer is located.

"All cancer is serious. We're worried about Jim and his family. We have no idea about his future with the club. That's not what we're worried about right now," Benson said.

Dr. Charles L. Brown Jr., a cancerspecialist and one of the team doctors, confirmed the diagnosis and is consulting with specialists.

Ditka ready for duty on NBC

by Dave Goldberg
AP sports writer

NEW YORK — Mike Ditka went soft on the first hard question he had to answer for NBC.

Ditka, the Chicago Bears' deposed head coach, will join the network as a studio analyst next season. He also will work on NBC's golf telecasts, trying to bring an amateur's perspective he has a handicap between five and seven.

So ... He was asked during a conference call Thursday if he thought Chip Beck was correct in laying up rather than going for the green on the 15th hole of the final round of the Masters when he trailed Bernhard Langer by three strokes.

"Well," Ditka replied, "I played the course the next day and hit the green in two. But I look at it this way: Chip Beck is a professional and knows his job. There was no guarantee he'd hit the green and get an eagle if he did. I have faith in what he said that he's as confident as anyone of getting a birdie when he has a wedge in his hand."

Which raises the question about what the football audience will get from Ditka, the latest in a line of coach-general manager types to join NBC. As in "All 28 coaches do great, great jobs." Is that what we'll get?

"I've never been bashful, have I?" he replied.

Ditka follows the likes of Bill Walsh, Bill Parcells, Bobby Beathard and Pat Riley to NBC. All now are back either coaching (Walsh, Parcells, Riley) or general managing (Beathard).

NBC wants in the studio what we used to see on television: Ditka haranguing players and officials, sometimes shaking them; Ditka walking out of news conferences.

"Ask Jim Harbaugh, Mike Tomczak or William Perry if Mike isn't blunt and candid," said Terry O'Neil, the network's executive producer. "Sure we know he could leave us at some time, but we know that for the time being, we're going to get the full measure of what he has to say."

And what does Ditka think about coaching again?

"I don't have the bug to coach right now," he said. "I don't live for the future, I live for the present."

Has he had any coaching offers yet?

"I had one with a grade school team," he said. "It wasn't very good. They'd only take care of my meals and pay my gas money."

"It was a joke, fellas," he added.

Charlotte to battle Celtics

The Associated Press

All those championship banners and retired uniform numbers at Boston Garden must be awfully intimidating for the Charlotte Hornets.

"It doesn't mean nothing to us," Kenny Gattison said of the Celtics' tradition of playoff success. "We don't have enough sense to worry about it. This is our first playoffs, and we're just pumped up."

Flying against caution, the Hornets even have admitted they'd rather play fourth-place Boston in the first round of the NBA playoffs, beginning tonight, than New York, Chicago or Cleveland, the top three teams in the Eastern Conference.

With Alonzo Mourning and Larry Johnson leading the way, the Hornets have reason for optimism.

"We know Boston can't run with us and we need to take that advantage," Mourning said. "I think we can overpower them with our endurance and speed."

"When (the ball) is in my hands, they're going to have to run with me," said point guard Muggsy Bogues, who is recovering from a groin injury, but says he is 90 percent of full strength.

Other playoffs tonight include San Antonio at Portland and the Los Angeles Clippers at Houston in the Western Conference, and New Jersey at Cleveland in the East.

On Friday night, it's the Los Angeles Lakers at Phoenix, Atlanta at Chicago, Indiana at New York and Utah at Seattle.

The Celtics, with Sherman Douglas and Dee Brown at point guard, believe they can run with the younger Hornets. Kevin Gamble, Reggie Lewis and Xavier McDaniel also like that style.

"He's a lot like George Gervin, tall and wiry," Hornets coach Allan Bristow said of Lewis. "He gets his shot up no matter how well you guard him."

Brown appears recovered from a minor hip injury. Kevin McHale is bothered by a sore back, but probably will play. McHale, believed to be on the verge of retiring, is critical for Boston to cope with the rebounding of Mourning and Johnson.

"We just have to make sure that we slow Muggsy up," Lewis said. "We can't allow him to get into the heart of our defense, breaking us down and dishing off to the big guys cutting to the basket."

The Hornets' small forward spot is shared by Johnny Newman and David Wingate, a former high school teammate of Lewis in Washington, D.C.

Elsewhere, Phoenix had 23 more regular-season victories than the Lakers, a 5-0 sweep of the season series and its lucky wrist bands as advantages against the Lakers.

Lucky wrist bands?

Suns guard Danny Ainge began the practice of wearing a rubber band on his left wrist. Now he and teammates Dan Majerle and Frank Johnson are doing it, and Majerle was wearing one when he made the 35-footer at the buzzer that beat the Lakers 115-114 April 6 and gave the Suns the 5-0 sweep.

"I'm wearing 'em for luck," said Majerle, who sometimes carries as many as three or four. "When they wear out, I just break out a new bag."

Ainge started the practice when he was with the Celtics. He remembered seeing Wilt Chamberlain wearing rubber bands around his socks to keep them up. Then he saw Maurice Cheeks of Philadelphia wearing a rubber band on his wrist.

As the only one of 16 playoff teams with a losing record, the Lakers are the eighth seed in the Western Conference playoffs.

"Certainly, we're going to be considered a heavy, heavy underdog, but we've been on the other side of that for a lot of years, and we know that a team that comes in loose and without a lot of expectations can make it very difficult," coach Randy Pfund said. "And that's what we hope to do with the Phoenix Suns. They're the best team in the NBA, and we have the worst record of all the teams in the playoffs."

The fifth in the Pacific Division.

Bengals attempt to lure Hasty

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Bengals, attempting to improve a porous pass defense already crippled by the loss of free-agent starting cornerback Eric Thomas, are trying to lure cornerback James Hasty from the New York Jets.

The Bengals on Wednesday made a one-year, $1.5 million offer to Hasty, a six-year pro from Washington State. He had two interceptions last year, but is considered one of the Jets' best defensive backs.

The Jets have designated Hasty a transition player, meaning they have the right to try and match other teams' salary offers to him.

Jets spokesman Ken Ilchuk declined Thursday to say whether the team will try to match Cincinnati's offer. The Jets have until a week from Wednesday's offer to match it.

Bengals general manager Mike Brown declined Thursday to say whether he plans further deals to try and shore up a pass defense that was one of the NFL's worst last season, when Cincinnati was last in the AFC Central Division with a 5-11 record.

"I can't tell you," Brown said. "We'll do whatever we think is necessary to help us."

Some Bengals fans are concerned that the team did little in last week's NFL draft to help improve the backfield. Brown said he thinks acquiring Hasty would impress the fans.

"We think people would perceive it that way. We think it would help us if we get him," Brown said. "He's a starting corner. He fits one of our principal needs."

"We don't believe the Jets will be inclined to match this, and James is excited that the Bengals are stepping up to show this kind of interest," said James Shaffer, a representative for Hasty.

Hasty would be the Bengals' second highest-paid player behind quarterback David Klingler, whose four-year deal averages $1.75 million.

Lamont Smith, Hasty's agent, said the offer specifies Hasty will be paid "$1.5 million, or the equivalent of what the highest-paid player on the team with five or more years experience is making."

For the Bengals, the clause is harmless. No Cincinnati player with "five or more years' experience will make $1.5 million in 1993.

But the Jets have several veterans making more than that, including quarterback Boomer Esiason, traded by the Bengals to New York last month. Esiason's 1993 salary is reportedly $2.7 million.

Hasty made $435,000 last year. Thomas signed a three-year deal with the Jets averaging just under $1.2 million per year.

Since then, the Bengals have signed unrestricted free agent Sheldon White of Detroit, but White was not a starter for the Lions.

"We think Hasty is a good all-around player," Bengals defensive coordinator Ron Lynn said. "He's strong against the run as well as the pass."

Hunter receives suspension

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dale Hunter of the Washington Capitals was suspended indefinitely by the NHL on Thursday for "unsportsmanlike and excessive conduct" the Capitals said.

Hunter rammed an unsuspecting Pierre Turgeon into the boards with his stick during the third period. He was assessed a major penalty for checking from behind and a game misconduct.

The incident came after the Islanders' all-star csion, and had to be helped off the ice.

The Islanders said Thursday he has a "moderate separation" of the right shoulder and will miss the Patrick Division finals with the Pittsburgh Penguins.

"He is presently undergoing physical therapy and hi much of (Turgeon's) game is feel. He's like a cat burglar. His hands are his instruments."

Maloney said the Islanders have been bombarded by phone calls and faxes from "outraged fans."

"This is what everyone's talking about," Maloney said. "(The violence) just reaffirms to the casual fan what he thinks of our game," Maloney said. "It has detracted from a terrific game (Wednesday night) and a terrific series."

The Islanders have yet to make any roster moves to replace Turgeon, who scored 58 goals during the regular season and four more in the first-round victory over the Capitals.

Cleveland likes 1993 schedule

The Associated Press

CLEVELAND — The Cleveland Browns open their 1993 schedule with a one-two punch, a home opener against in-state rival Cincinnati followed by a Monday night game.

The Browns said Wednesday they will open their regular season by hosting the Cincinnati Bengals at Cleveland Stadium on Sept. 5. Eight days later, the Browns host the San Francisco 49ers in a nationally televised game.

"I like having the opening two games at home and feel flattered that the league saw fit to award us with the Monday night special at our place," Browns owner Art Modell said in a news release.

The Browns' next two games will be on the road Sept. 19 at the Los Angeles Raiders, and Sept. 26 at Indianapolis followed by an AFC Central bye week.

The Browns host Miami Oct. 10, then travel to Cincinnati Oct. 17. They host Pittsburgh on Oct. 24, then have another bye on Oct. 31.

For the next two months, the Browns alternate home and away dates: At home against Denver on Nov. 7 and Houston on Nov. 21, away against Seattle on Nov. 14 and Atlanta on Nov. 28; at home against New Orleans on Dec. 5 and New England on Dec. 19, and away against Houston on Dec. 12 and the Los Angeles Rams on Dec. 26.

The Browns wrap up the regular season with an away game at Pittsburgh on Jan. 2.

Browns coach Bill Belichick said he was especially pleased with the schedule during the latter half of November and the first two weeks of December.

"We play Houston twice and Atlanta once during that stretch, and they run similar four-wide offenses that take some special preparations," Belichick said.

Work to cultivate the buckle-up habit. It could save your life.

Schwartzwalder dies at age 83

The Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. -- Ben Schwartzwalder, who produced a national championship, a Heisman Trophy winner and a string of great running backs in a 25-year coaching career at Syracuse, died Wednesday. He was 83.

He was remembered as a brilliant coach, fiery competitor and generous individual.

"Football coach. Ben was the definition," former Syracuse coach Dick MacPherson said. "If anybody saw Ben, they called him 'coach.' You couldn't help it. That's exactly what he was."

Schwartzwalder died at a St. Petersburg, Fla., hospital where he was taken after suffering a heart attack last week.

Schwartzwalder turned out a long line out of outstanding running backs, including Jim Brown, Heisman winner Ernie Davis, Jim Nance, Floyd Little and Larry Csonka.

His teams had 22 consecutive non-losing seasons and went to seven bowl games. His 1959 team won the national championship.

Schwartzwalder suffered a heart attack in February and was recuperating at his winter home in St. Petersburg. He had another heart attack last Thursday.

"He was a great man," said Larry Kimball, the school's sports information director and a close friend of Schwartzwalder. "He truly was the stuff legends are made of."

Ger Schwedes, who teamed with Davis in the backfield of Schwartzwalder's national championship team, said his coach was hard but honest.

"You always knew where you stood," Schwedes said. "You wanted to work hard for him. I owe him tons. He prepared me for life more than any teacher ever did."

Schwartzwalder, a decorated paratrooper during World War II, had a 153-91-3 record at Syracuse.

He coached the 1959 team to an 11-0 record and the national championship, culminating with a Cotton Bowl win over Texas. That team, regarded as one of the best in college football, allowed only 59 points all season and a remarkable average of 19 yards rushing per game.

Schwartzwalder was a master of the run offense. He recruited great backs, then put in offensive line schemes that were ahead of their time. Opponents found it difficult to prepare for his trademark unbalanced offensive line.

"I always wanted our teams to be different," Schwartzwalder said in 1989. "We ran that offensive line which left people all messed up."

A crumbling stadium and a boycott by some black players in 1970 precipitated the decline in the program. Schwartzwalder retired at 65 after a 2-9 season in 1973.

He is a member of the College Football Hall of Fame.

Schwartzwalder coached high school football for eight years before joining the Army and serving as a paratrooper in Europe during World War II. He jumped on D-Day.

After the war, he coached at Muhlenberg College for three years.

Schwartzwalder graduated from West Virginia in 1933, where he played center on the football team.

He coached at Parkersburg High from 1936 to 1940 compiling a 45-6-2 record. In 1940, his team went 12-0, scoring 420 points and yielding only 26. He also coached at McKinley High School in Canton, Ohio, compiling a 6-3-1 record in 1941.

Perez adopts relaxed ways

by Joe Kay
AP sports writer

CINCINNATI -- Tony Perez couldn't believe the videotape of Kansas City manager Hal McRae erupting after a loss.

The Cincinnati Reds manager has as many reasons to throw a fit the Reds' 7-13 record is a game worse than the Royals (8-12). While McRae was flinging ashtrays and tape recorders this week, Perez was shrugging and trying to handle his team's troubles with humor.

Perez was incredulous Wednesday when talking about McRae's outburst.

"He really lost his cool there," Perez said. "That's not my style. You can't make me that mad. What does that do? Nothing."

"Everyone has their own way to do things. I don't like to do things and then have to apologize. You're going to throw things and hurt somebody and then apologize? If you're going to do something, think about what you're going to do before you do it."

McRae lost his temper while talking to reporters after the Royals' 5-3 loss Monday night to Detroit and starting throwing things that were on his desk top. One reporter wound up with a cut on his face.

By contrast, Perez, a rookie manager with a one-year contract, has kept his cool through his team's poor start. A day after the Reds bungled their way to a 4-3 loss to Florida, Perez was telling funny stories Wednesday and joking about his team's troubles.

"Everything is happening to me," he said. "I got this today."

He held up an overnight delivery envelope with the return address of Cleveland Indians outfielder Albert Belle.

"It's from Albert Belle. I open it up, and there's nothing in it," Perez said. "It's unbelievable. That's what I'm getting nothing. That made my day today."

Perez is handling the poor start a lot better than his general manager. Jim Bowden is starting to take his frustrations out on his furniture.

"I have to buy a new TV set," Bowden said Wednesday. "I kicked mine in when I got home last night."

Left fielder Kevin Mitchell was back in the starting lineup Wednesday after missing five straight games because of a pulled hamstring.

Mitchell has missed half of the Reds' games, keeping a low profile while hurt. He was leading the barbs in the clubhouse before the game Wednesday, a turnabout that teammates attributed to nervousness because he hadn't played in a while.

"There isn't enough here to make me nervous," Mitchell said. "Nervous is being handcuffed."

A few minutes later, Mitchell sat in his locker with a washed-out look.

"I feel like I'm not even here today," he said. "I feel like I'm getting sick."

Mitchell's hamstring, broken left foot and excess pounds have made him a liability in left field. But the Reds need his hitting. Mitchell leads the team with a .455 average with runners in scoring position.

Bengals open against Browns

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI -- The Cincinnati Bengals open their regular season Sept. 5 at Cleveland and play six of their first nine games against AFC Central opponents.

"For a young team this is a tough way to get into the season," general manager Mike Brown said Wednesday.

Cincinnati's home opener is Sept. 12 against Indianapolis. "We like the fact that all our home games are at 1 p.m., which we believe pleases the fans," Brown said.

The Bengals, 5-11 last season, were not scheduled for a Monday night appearance. All their games are on Sunday afternoon with the exception of a Dec. 5 game at San Francisco that is being televised at 8 p.m. by ESPN.

The preseason schedule: Aug. 7, New York Giants; Aug. 14, at Indianapolis; Aug. 20, at Detroit; Aug. 27 Philadelphia.

The regular season: Sept. 5, at Cleveland; Sept. 12, Indianapolis; Sept. 19, at Pittsburgh; Sept. 26, Seattle.

Oct. 3, bye; Oct. 10, at Kansas City; Oct. 17, Cleveland; Oct. 24, at Houston; Oct. 31, bye.

Nov. 7, Pittsburgh; Nov. 14, Houston; Nov. 21, at New York Jets; Nov. 28, Los Angeles Raiders;

Dec. 5, at San Francisco; Dec. 12, at New England; Dec. 19, Los Angeles Rams; Dec. 26, Atlanta.

Hundreds mourn Valvano's death

by Tom Foreman
AP sports writer

APEX, N.C. -- Hundreds of people lined the sidewalk Thursday leading to the Catholic church where Jim Valvano worshiped, waiting to pay their respects to the late North Carolina State basketball coach.

Valvano's widow Pam and his three daughters came to the church near their Cary home at 4:05 p.m. EDT. The black casket trimmed in burnished gold had arrived earlier.

Some in the crowd wore black, while others donned Wolfpack red. At least 300 people arrived in the first hour and stood in a line that snaked out of the church as Valvano's family spoke with everyone.

Among those at the wake was ESPN broadcasting partner Dick Vitale. He called Valvano an "entertainer deluxe. A special, beautiful person."

Also there were Derek Whittenburg, a member of Valvano's 1983 championship team; Maryland coach Gary Williams, Georgia Tech assistant coach Kevin Cantwell and television analyst and funeral services are scheduled for 11 a.m. Friday.

The life of the charismatic coach was celebrated with songs, stories and silence a day after he lost a 10-month battle with cancer.

News that Jimmy V was gone prompted a marathon of calls to a Raleigh rock-and-roll station's request line.

Local radio and television stations replayed the words and pictures from his career, including the final seconds of the 1983 title game in which N.C. State defeated Houston on a last-second dunk by Lorenzo Charles.

Someone placed a rose at the base of a sign post on a street which this week was named for Valvano.

Bob Walton, program manager at WRDU-FM in Raleigh, said the station's normal lunchtime request show became a marathon in memory of the Wolfpack coach.

"I was very surprised," Walton said.

Valvano touched many hearts

by Tom Foreman
AP sports writer

RALEIGH, N.C. -- Almost every recollection of Jim Valvano contained a moment which left an impression hard to erase.

From the political circles of Washington to basketball courts nationwide, people were touched by the former North Carolina State coach.

Colleagues spoke of a fun-loving guy from New York who never stopped talking hoops and then dedicated the final months of his life to fighting what was cutting it short.

Valvano, who showed the same flair and wit on the way to a national championship as he did when he gave up his job amid a scandal, lost a 10-month fight with cancer Wednesday. Valvano was 47, and while most acknowledged they would miss him, others talked about his contributions to the game ... and life.

"He fought the good fight, the gallant fight against bone cancer, but I submit that he established himself as a profile in courage," said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who took time on the Senate floor to tell the story of the 1983 national championship team that couldn't get to Washington to visit President Reagan after its improbable victory over a bigger and more-talented Houston.

NCAA rules at the time prevented a championship team from traveling more than 100 miles from its home campus, meaning the Wolfpack wouldn't enjoy the privilege of others before them. Helms said Valvano knew of the rule and had a plan.

"They can rule against the team going down to Washington and sitting down with the President of the United States, but there is no rule, NCAA or otherwise, that says Jim Valvano has to stay in Raleigh," said Helms, recalling a conversation with the coach.

Valvano said he would not only visit the President, but would arrange a satellite link back to Raleigh as the team sat in a television studio. The link was established, but Reagan had to take care of last-minute protocol before the ceremony began.

"The President said 'Is it Val-van-oh or Val-von-oh? I want to pronounce your name right,'" Helms said.

"It is Val-van-oh," the coach responded, "And by the way, Mr. President, is it Re-gan or Ray-gan?"

Six years after he became basketball coach at N.C. State, Valvano took on the additional role of athletic director. He held both jobs until 1989, when his program was the focus of allegations of wrongdoing based on the book "Personal Fouls."

In 1987, Atlantic Coast Conference commissioner Gene Corrigan had let Valvano know how he felt about the dual jobs.

"I want you to know something from the very beginning. I do not believe you should have been both the athletic director and the basketball coach," Corrigan said of his conversation with Valvano. "That's just a personal bias that I had."

"For the next half-hour, he regaled me on why he should have both jobs. When I left, I wasn't sure of my position."

There was one thing that Corrigan was sure of. "He was the most unique person I think I've ever met," he said. "He's certainly one of the brightest. He's one of the most compelling personalities I've ever known."

Georgia Tech coach and fellow New Yorker Bobby Cremins recalled seeing Valvano back on the job as a basketball analyst for ESPN this season. As the season drew on, however, Valvano's illness kept him from making assignments.

"I remember he spoke to our team before we played down at Florida State and all he talked about was his situation," Cremins said. "He told our team, 'You have an opportunity to play. You don't have cancer. You should give it your fullest.'"

The current coaching staff at Colorado has formed an N.C. State alumni association of sorts. Former Valvano assistants Tom Abate-marco and Derek Whittenburg are now assistants to Joe Harrington with the Buffaloes.

"Sometimes, he would be going through his speech and I would get so fired up, I'd forget that I was one of the coaches," Whittenburg said in a radio interview. "I was thinking I was a player. I was getting ready to go out there and play."

North Carolina coach Dean Smith said the rivalry with Valvano and N.C. State stayed on the court.

"Not only did Jim have a great coaching career, speaking career, family and friends, but in this last year he was a role model of courage to the countless thousands afflicted with life-threatening diseases," Smith said.

Valvano's successor, Les Robinson, added similar feelings. "We will miss him for his other attributes: the intelligence, the ability to make people smile, the ability to entertain," Robinson said.

Taking a walk on the 'Dark' side

New Stephen King-based flick disappoints with humorless horror

by David Huffman
Insider film critic

Being from Pittsburgh, I have a soft spot in my heart for director George A. Romero. He has been making his films in and around our hometown since he shocked the world with his Night of the Living Dead in the late '60s. With this film, he established himself as a master of horror, a reputation that grew in the '70s with the release of movies like Martin and Dawn of the Dead.

Like all great filmmakers, Romero is not always able to live up to his audience's expectations as they sit hoping to be overwhelmed by every one of his films. This sense of disappointment is likely to be felt by a lot of people as they leave his latest picture, The Dark Half.

Based on Stephen King's book by the same name, Romero's current release was actually filmed several years ago and has been sitting on the bankrupt Orion's shelf until last weekend. The added anticipation of its release did not help The Dark Half, however. It only makes the sadly mediocre film a bigger letdown.

Thad Beaumont (Timothy Hutton) is a superficially mild-mannered college professor who teaches creative writing. Beneath the surface lives his alter ego, George Stark (also Hutton), the pen name under which Beaumont has published a highly popular series of violent pulp novels. When a blackmailer threatens to "out" this respected professor as a trash novelist, Beaumont decides to go public himself and "kill off" George Stark. However, Stark isn't ready or willing to let this happen, so he comes back from his "grave" to avenge his death by killing off all those linked to his demise.

As the title suggests, the film is about the good and the bad sides that every person has and does his or her best to maintain the balance between. When "the dark half" is encouraged, it can take over, or as in the film, come to life as its own entity.

By doing so, the movie divides itself into Thad's story, the psychological struggle, and George's story, the slasher film. As Thad learns that his childhood brain tumor was an absorbed twin, he begins to realize that there have always been two sides to himself. Only after Thad is able to recognize the danger of his dark half is he able to put that side of himself to rest. However, the means by which Romero and King let Thad come to this realization are repugnant and disturbing as George slices and beats his victims.

Romero has never been one to shy away from gore. Blood and guts are the bread and butter of his career. However, in the past his gore has been cloaked in a kind of cartoonish style that is missing in

The Dark Half. The twisted joy with which Romero showed his zombies cannibalizing their victims in his Living Dead series is gone now, and in its place is a certain hostility.

That seems to be a backward criticism, as if I want violence to be something fun to watch. I don't. I just didn't like watching Thad's publisher get her face cut up by George. It was a terrifying scene in which Romero conveyed the true horror of the victim. But because it lacked the black humor that is so important in Romero's movies, it was merely unsettling and turned me off to the film.

Many critics are citing The Dark Half as a sign that Romero has lost his artistry. This is an overly harsh criticism, though. The Dark Half is not a horrible movie. It has moments of great suspense and a few touches of classic Romero black humor. It just doesn't quite work as a whole and left me wishing I were watching Martin instead.

The Dark Half is showing at the Woodland Mall Cinemark 5.

Two seniors lauded

by Courtney Gangemi
Insider staff writer

BGSU has two Outstanding Young Men walking around campus, and they have even received awards for being just that.

The 1992 edition of Outstanding Young Men of America will include Joel Bressman, senior computer science major, and Michael Sears, senior psychology/history major.

The OYMA program, which is in its 27th year, has encouraged men between the ages of 21 and 40 to distinguish themselves in many different exceptional fields. These include everything from service in the community and cultural accomplishments to civic and political participation. The participants' achievements in these areas are derived from extreme dedication, responsibility and striving toward excellence.

The OYMA Board of Advisors and Editors salute all those honored as Outstanding Young Men of America and want to bring these individuals to the public's attention.

Bressman and Sears are among those who were selected after 65,000 nominations were received from political leaders, university and college officials, clergymen, business leaders and civic and community organizations.

"[The program] is designed to keep better track of their point systems," Bressman said. "It is a computerized plan."

The good doctor... is outta here

by Dave Baskind
The Incredible College of Musical Knowledge

Here we are. The school year's end is upon us. As we prepare for finals week and the blur of activity that is bound to accompany it, Dr. Dave thought it might be appropriate (or at least trivial) to recall some of the memorable events that shaped this past year.

However, since this is a music trivia column first and foremost, let's look at the answers to our final quiz of the year here at "Dr. Dave's Incredible College of Musical Knowledge." The 'walk' songs were by (in order): Annie Lennox, Toad the Wet Sprocket, Jade, and Cece Peniston; the 'W' winner is Jason Kucsma. Extreme's two Top 10 hits were "More Than Words" and "Hole Hearted"; Ann Bailey is the 'X' winner. Yes' #1 hit was "Owner of a Lonely Heart"; Bob Sadowski is the 'Y' winner. All the winners receive fabulous prizes from Finders Records and Tapes in lovely downtown Bowling Green and Carly Cheena's in Maumee. Congrats to all of the winners.

From music to the world in which we live. So much happened in the past year that it's hard to decide where to begin. I'll just dive in somewhere. In the world of sports, the Tarheels, Bulls, Blue Jays and Cowboys all emerged as champions. This year featured two controversial BG arrivals: the Fieldhouse and Wal-Mart. Bowling Green also saw Jan Brady (Eve Plumb), Scott Hamilton, the AIDS Quilt, George Bush and, of course, the National Tractor Pull come through town. This year saw the entrance of a new president and the rapid rise and mysterious disappearance of Ren and Stimpy. Is it a weird coincidence that both happened in the same year? You be the judge.

Tragic, and sometimes scary, news of the past year centered around the Cleveland Indians, the Lucasville prison, John Umbel, the first Rodney King verdict, Bosnia, a hurricane named Andrew and David Koresh. All were disturbing (or disturbed) in their own ways. On a more transparent note: Everything became suddenly clear this year. From Crystal Pepsi to clear detergent to clear beer (yes, it's true). Someone should clear house with all this see-through stuff. What's next - clear hamburgers? See-through toilets? Why did a purple, public television dinosaur get so damn popular? And, how do you explain that this year produced two of the biggest hits of ALL TIME - r Whitney Houston's "I Will Always Love You" and Boyz II Men's

On the tube, we saw Dylan pick Kelly (good choice, Luke), Oprah interview Michael, Maggie and Joel "did it" and Kramer was the "king of his castle" on Seinfeld. We also saw Cheers bum down and then prepare to shut down. Also, this year we got ever-closer to maximum talk show density (in both senses of the word 'density'). There were too many talk shows, talk show hosts, stupid talk show topics and talk show controversies. Some of those involved include: Arsenio, Johnny, Jay, Dana, Dave, Garry, Vicki, Regis and Kathie Lee, Dennis, Chevy, Oprah, Phil, Geraldo, Sally Jessy, Montel, Faith and many more, ad nauseating. Let's say we start a petition to remove all but Dave and Oprah, OK?

The really big TV events of the year were, without a moment's hesitation, infomercials. From that annoying white-haired "Stop the Madness" weirdo, to the ooh-sign-me-up Miracle Hair (what-I'm-convinced-is) spray paint, to the round-faced Food Dehydrator guy with his Turkey Jerky crap, to the pointless everthing-is-triangle-shaped Sandwich Maker to my personal favorite, the Flow-Vee. Do you know what this is? It's a little gizmo you attach to your vacuum that sucks up and then cuts your hair. I gotta get me one. This year also saw big nights from Clint and Clapton.

BG sports teams had some amazing seasons. These include (but are not limited to) the women's basketball and volleyball teams and the men's football and soccer teams.

In the last 12 months we had the apparent omnipresence of Garth Brooks, Madonna, Michael Jackson and Amy Fisher. Aren't we all getting more than a little tired of these people? There was Woody Allen's fiasco, a royal divorce, my mother's Bat Mitzvah, my grandfather's death, my girlfriend's more-than-just-decent proposal (of her master's thesis) and my best friend's wedding. Cleveland finally saw groundbreaking on a new baseball stadium and the ridiculous long-delayed Rock & Roll Hall of Fame, which is now scheduled for a 1995 opening (if I'm not mistaken).

Want to be big on the music charts these days? Well, if so, follow one or more of Dr. Dave's Four 1992-1993 Tips For Hits: (1) Come from Seattle (examples of those who took this route include Kenny G, Pearl Jam, Nirvana, Alice In Chains, Soundgarden, Temple of the Dog, the Singles soundtrack and Sir Mix-A-Lot); (2) Hit first on the R & B chart (like Shai, Boyz II Men, Whitney, Silk, Snow, Vanessa Williams, Dr. Dre, En Vogue and Arrested Development) or the country chart (like Garth, Billy Ray, Restless Heart, Wynonna, Brooks & Dunn, George Strait and Alan Jackson); (3) Be British (performers in this category include Depeche Mode, Sting, Eric Clapton and Sade); or, (4) (This one is a bizarre idea, but it does occasionally work.) Defy all rules and just be a good long-touring, fun-rocking, non-fashion-conscious American band

(this works best if you're the Spin Doctors, although the Black Crowes and Soul Asylum did OK with this, too).

Sequels ruled the box office. Terminator 2, Home Alone 2, and Batman Returns all had a big year. But, so did other films like A League of Their Own, Basic Instinct, Wayne's World, Sister Act, Unforgiven and A Few Good Men. Also, "smaller" films like A River Runs Through It and The Crying Game did surprisingly well. Plus, we had the movie with the million-dollar question (Indecent Proposal).

Last year, Arthur Ashe and Magic Johnson showed us two different ways in which professional athletes deal with AIDS. In the past 365, we saw the return of Boy George, Duran Duran, Bo Jackson and bell-bottoms. Did we really need bell-bottoms to return?

As for me, this year I got a beard, my master's degree (OK, so I'm not really a doctor yet; I can dream though) and chicken pox. A kooky year it was. Wouldn't you agree? So, what will become of Dr. Dave from here? I'm not exactly sure. I plan on writing again for this fine publication in the fall. However, you'll have to return to class next September to find out all the details. Will Doctor Dave tyrannically control Insider Magazine? Will he get his own talk show? Will he join the Beverly Hills 90210 cast and become America's newest heartthrob? Will Paul still be his trusty sidekick in the band? (Whoops, wrong Dave.) Will Doctor Dave, in a gin-crazed frenzy, wind up in the Blotter? Are the rumors about Doctor Dave and Kim Basinger true? Stay tuned. Before I forget, thanks for always reading this column and writing to me. The music and you make it all worthwhile.

In the meantime, have yourselves a merry little summer. Have fun. Be sure to keep your feet on the ground and keep reaching for the stars. Take out the trash. Work hard, play hard, rest easy and be free. Enjoy these times. These could be the best days of our lives. Let the ones you love know it. Crank it up to 11. Make the time. Be the ball. Take care, mi amigos. I am outta here.

Enuff Znuft
Animals with Human Intelligence
 Arista Records

Well everyone, I know this is the release that you have all been waiting for. Enuff Znuft is back! All kidding aside, this is an impressive album from three guys who've been ridiculed for everything from their outfits to their eye makeup.

The band seems to have come a long way out of the faddish seventies music to bring it a bit more update, even at a time when '70s fashions are re-entering our culture at an alarming rate.

One of the most impressive things about the album is the meaning behind some of the lyrics. In slower songs such as "One Step Closer to You" and "Bring it on Home," Chip Znuft's voice oozes emotion through every note while trying to express the value of love and the pain of unreturned love.

"Tear my heart out if I could/I really wish I understood/Just what exactly made you go/I feel that I deserve to know."

The band then moves to faster-paced songs with striving notes and powerful guitar solos that throb with percussion and self-derision such as "Master of Pain." This song cries out with pain about a life where no one cares, from a mother to a lover.

I'll be the first one to admit that I was not completely sure what to expect with this album. Not that the first one was bad...it was just kinda the norm for the time period it came out in. But this is really good stuff! It is not the sort of thing you would listen to for serious thought, although it does hit some pretty important issues like losing virginity and abortion.

Animals with Human Intelligence is mainly an album for fun and general enjoyment. It's a light-hearted journey into the musical arena.

—Dorian Halkovich

Vigilantes of Love
Killing Floor

Enuff Znuft

Fingerprint/Sky Records

This two-man band has conjured up a selection of chilling melodies that contemplate subjects such as wrongful death, depression and suicide and the working man's perspective on life.

All of these songs are set to an acoustic backdrop of guitar, bass, mandolin, acoustic slide and piano with a Bob Dylan sound and Neil Young-inspired lyrics.

It's refreshing to hear this style of folk music again with imaginative lyrics that directly hit the conscience and inspire you to think.

Favorite songs on the album include "I Can't Remember," a dark perspective of death; "Motel Room," a suicidal individual's last cry for help; and "Hip Train," a look at how directly our pop culture influences our everyday life.

This is an excellent album if you've got the time to stop and closely listen to the lyrics.

—Michael Zawacki

Cop Shoot Cop
Ask Questions Later
 Interscope Records

Cop Shoot Cop's latest album, Ask Questions Later, sounds like your typical hard-core rap band. After playing the album, however, I realized that this was actually a hard-core mind tear. They have a hard, alternative sound but with one major difference — no guitar. Cop Shoot Cop relies on a high and low end bass to give their music the balls it needs.

"Fumace," "Everybody Loves You When You're Dead," and "Ten Dollar Bill" are the three songs that give the album its hard-core sound with heavy, chunky riffs. The previously mentioned mind tear portion of the record comes from the instrumental portions of "Israeli Dig" and "Migration."

Overall, this is a good album to mellow out to and "experience" after a hard night of partying with a few friends. This is because of its disturbing, yet jamming qualities. For those with a narrow mind, I would advise you to shy away. You won't like it.

—Butch Phillips

Hothouse Flowers
Songs from the Rain
 London Records

After a three year absence, Hothouse Flowers is back with their new album, titled Songs from the Rain. As soon as I started the record, I had the feeling that this would be a good listen from start to finish. And I would definitely have to say that I wasn't disappointed.

"This Is It (Your Soul)" is the first track on the album and it definitely gets things going on the right foot. Lead singer Liam O'Maonlai sounds a little like Talking Heads front man David Byrne in this catchy tune that should be receiving some degree of radio airplay. The acoustic guitar riffs of Fiachna O'Braonain (you've got to love these names) and O'Maonlai's voice complement each other quite nicely on this track.

All in all, I would say that you aren't going to find a bad song anywhere on this record. From start to finish, you'll find yourself singing along and really getting into the music. I don't think Hothouse Flowers would have wanted anything more.

Creme de la campus: you c

We have received your responses, the votes have been tallied, your voice has been heard. After two weeks of calculating your favorites and chuckling over your responses, we are ready to present you with the annual Insider Magazine Best of Bowling Green issue, circa spring 1993.

Once again this year, we had some tight races that went right down to the wire and were separated by a vote here or a vote there.

Favorite Restaurant Favorite Bar

This year, Easy Street Cafe, 104 S. Main, has captured not one, but two of the Best of BG titles for the year. In a landslide victory, Easy Street was named favorite restaurant and in a closer vote, best bar by Bowling Green students. And with good reason.

The food is just as satisfying and varied as the beer, and the casual atmosphere both upstairs and down is fit for every occasion. Wood floors, T-shirted waiters and waitresses and black and white photos of popular musicians decorate the eatery, while the music played in the background reflects the likes of our generation. The menu is stocked with everything from appetizers and sandwiches to steak and fondue; and don't forget that sweet ending, of which there are many to choose from.

"It's pretty flattering," said Matt Wheeler, the bar manager. "Everybody here's pretty psyched up."

"We've always been known for the restaurant and the quality of food we serve," he added. "I think it's taken a couple of years for people to realize that we've got a pretty good bar upstairs."

To provide you with a more accurate look at your favorites, we are prepared to give you the top three in each category, right down to the last percentage point.

Lastly, thank you very much for the overwhelming response to this year's edition of the poll. We couldn't have put this issue together without your help. So without further ado, let's get on to your favorites!

Wheeler said he believes a big key to winning BG's best bar this year is the fact that the younger patrons have been targeted as well. In the past, Easy Street was strictly 21 and over, but starting this year the bar dropped to 19 and over for weekdays.

Besides, where else in town can you go for a good meal, a good band, and a classy atmosphere all in one night?

"Our patrons get a whole night of entertainment," Wheeler said. "The quality of our bands and our prices are comparable to anyone else in town."

"And besides, our bar's not the meat market that you find in other places," he added.

1. Easy Street.....53%
2. Fricker's.....13%
The China.....13%

1. Easy Street.....20%
2. Uptown.....13%

Favorite pizza

Mmmmmmm...Myles' Pizza and Subs - one of the best trademarks of Bowling Green. The majority of BG students think that there is nothin' better. And now the restaurant has two locations, the traditional still being 516 E. Wooster and the latest just west on the same street.

"I think it's great that we were chosen," Todd Bressler, Myles' assistant manager said. "I'm not surprised."

How about some pepperoni, spicy chicken or pineapple on a pizza? Myles' has it all, plus many 'lovers', specialties including their 'Mexican Lovers,' which is piled high with spicy tomato sauce, lettuce, tomatoes, several cheeses and meat.

"It's not cardboard pizza with cheese," Bressler said. "We make our own sauce with a secret recipe."

Myles' subs are just as tasty, as their are just as many of those to choose from as there are pizza toppings.

The restaurant is open Sunday through Wednesday, 11 a.m. to 2:30 a.m., and Thursday, Friday and Saturday from 11 a.m. to 3 a.m.

2. Pisanello's.....25%
3. Pizza Hut.....13%

Favorite fast food

Once again, Taco Bell of 320 E. Wooster St. has been named favorite fast food place by the students of Bowling Green. And why not? Where else can you find a big burrito supreme filled with goodies like soft refried beans, tomato wedgies and crunchy green onions? And that mixture of sour cream and mild sauce - it's enough to make ya shiver with joy. Good thing we have a savored Taco Bell within walking distance, especially after a long night out at the local drinking establishments.

"I think it is great (to be chosen as favorite)," said David Januszewski, Taco Bell assistant manager. "Finally, after all these years of serving people coming home from the bars, we get some recognition!"

Besides the quick service and incredible grub (which some would swear is better than authentic Mexican food), the prices can't be beat when all you have in your pocket is change.

Januszewski agrees that the restaurant's location, prices and fast service and the three main sources that keep students coming back.

Taco Bell is open until 2 a.m. Sunday through Wednesday, and from 9 a.m. until 3 a.m. on Thursday. Weekends, the border is open from 9 a.m. until 3:30 a.m.

Where to meet

One year ago, the voters of BG picked the classroom as the place where they are most likely to try and meet members of the opposite sex. This year, however, the classroom have given way to the downtown haven that many a student travel to for their weekend enjoyment - the bars of BG.

By a comfortable margin, voters in this year's poll declared Bowling Green's downtown establishments as the definitive place they go to check out the opposite sex. The answers ranged from the vague - the bars - to particular bars, to

Fave place

For the second consecutive year, the old-fashioned bedroom has emerged as the number one place students choose when they want to make out. Not that it's real creative or anything, it just seems that the place that is most convenient is the place that you choose to do it most.

Not to say that some of you didn't come up with some creative responses. They ranged from the cemetery (yeah right), to the sta-the very particular -- "scope fest at Mark's." Any which way, the answers added up to the same. When the students of BG are looking for a companion, the place where they are most likely to look is the bars.

Once again, the classroom ranked as a decent place -- makes sense, seeing as how that's where we spent most of our time anyway -- to tie for second with parties.

Fave local band

Bowling Green is the home of many great local bands, all of which range in sound and style and all that attract big audiences. One particular style that tends to be exceptionally popular however is classic, hard and 'popular' rock, all terms that describe the music played by Blitzen.

Locally, Blitzen can be found most often at Easy Street Cafe and Howard's Club H (by the way, they will be appearing at Easy Street tonight and tomorrow). The band plays all of your favorites old and new, including the big hits from Styx, Don Henley, Journey, Led Zepplin, BTO, Genesis, Boston, Cheap Trick, The Cars, Bad Company, Joe Walsh, Nazareth and Foreigner.

These guys are great entertainment and if your not careful, their music may just coerce you out onto the dance floor. Either way, you'll still be singing along. So join those who voted Blitzen Bowling Green's pick of the year and go see them play this weekend -- they won't let you down.

Fave issue of Insider

All right you jokers out there. We know you don't really mean it when you respond to our question of "Favorite issue of Insider" with one word -- "None." We know you're just kidding around, right? We hope so, you wouldn't want to hurt our feelings would you?

For those of you who did take the time to respond (and hey, who ever put "BG Myths," that issue came out about two years ago) we thank you and we appreciate your support.

Of course, in a year that saw the election of a democrat to the White House for the first time in 12 years, our readers would go against the grain and choose conservative talk show host Rush Limbaugh as the topic of their favorite issue of Insider.

Special thanks to former staff writer Jacqueline Porter who took the time to do a great deal of research -- like read the book. She also put in a great deal of time to call the various political wannabees on campus for their reaction to the rolly-polly star of talk radio and television who has an opinion on just about anything.

Other favorites included our special Bon Jovi issue, our feature on Hash Bash and our feature on the Adopt-a-Convict pen pal plan.

Baby, let us show you how to shape that body

by Jason Hunt
Insider staff writer

Springtime in BG. The Arctic winds stop blowing and the sun makes an occasional appearance after vacationing in Bora Bora for the last six months.

Time to start taking those layers of clothes off. Sweatshirts, long johns and other various necessities of winter in Northwest Ohio are thankfully peeled away.

But what's that? Feet that have just shed their boots are harder to see, and it feels like those thighs still have a layer or two of insulation on them.

Never fear! That extra padding that you've gathered through a long winter's nap of beer, television and the infamous Myles' pizza ("A little fat will help keep me warm" is an excuse we've all tried at one time or another) is mere steps away from being a distant memory, if you follow the motherly advice of the caring staff here at the Insider.

A warning shot was sounded back in early spring semester into our shivering, snow-drifted lives, with the approach of that week of artificial sunshine known as spring break. According to Richard Bowers, fitness director at the Student Recreation Center, many start their desperate quest for fitness then.

"The Rec is busy at the beginning of the fall semester, but then it drops off as we get into winter," Bowers said. "Once we hit January, things pick up again until our peak month of February."

Bowers said that pumping up and slimming down for the beaches is better than nothing, but that it's not really the best way to be healthy.

"Getting in shape just for spring break is somewhat short-sighted," Bowers said. "Students who want to be healthy need to be thinking about a fairly consistent, year-round plan."

Wow, that was loud! The noise of all those excuses sounding at once rattled the windows and almost knocked the cheeseburgers over. We know, we know. Exams. Papers. Work. Going to the bars. Passing out. Waking up with a splitting headache. (Oh, wait, those last few are for a different article, one that Mom and Dad won't see.) We're all too busy for that exercise stuff. We just don't have time, and when we do, we're just too tired or stressed out.

According to Jeanne Wright, health education director at the Student Wellness Center, that's exactly the wrong attitude to have, whether it's exam time or any other.

"Exercise is such a fantastic stress reliever, even if it's just stretching for a few minutes a day," Wright said. "It ends up increasing stamina, and you will actually be able to accomplish more with that healthier body."

"Most people even end up with more time to do things when they exercise," she said. "Not only does that extra stamina come into play, but a daily regimen can even help organize your time better."

OK, you're on your feet, the French fries are put away (in the fridge, not your stomach) and you're ready to get healthy. So what to do now?

Well, the classics are always available. Jogging, weightlifting, aerobics, basketball. Anything to get those calories burning faster than using the remote control does. Wright said that along with those basics, students today are turning to some other methods of working out.

"A lot of students are doing aerobics to exercise tapes in their rooms," she said. "That allows them to get in shape without being out in front of too many people. Some even have those small personal stair machines."

"There are also some other, less orthodox ways students are exercising," Wright said. "Quite a few run up and down the stairs in the residence halls, and I know one girl who takes her jump rope when she travels and works out when she gets the chance."

Wright points out that no matter what type of activity is for you, it is important to do a wide variety and to exercise the whole body.

"I wholeheartedly recommend cross-training," she said. "If you're lifting weights, throw some running or brisk walking into the routine. Or try an activity like swimming that works many of the groups at once."

"The other key is to start off at a moderate level," Wright said. "Too many times, people strain themselves too much when they first start, and then don't go back because they are too stiff."

In other words, if your roommate has to help you get your shirt off for three days after you work out, you're probably overdoing it.

Now that you know what to do, pick a couple of exercises and stick with a program of doing them at least 20 minutes at a time, three or four times a week.

And if you happen to be jogging by, stop in and say "Hi." And could you pass those potato chips in the cupboard way across the room?

Need an alternative to metal? Try Tinfoil

by Dorian Halkovich
Insider staff writer

Tin Foil

Okay, I know all the people who read Insider Magazine every week see all the band information and assume that either these bands are cover bands or the typical local acts. But hey, here is something new that formerly was nonexistent in Bowling Green and is also rare in the national music scene.

What is this big difference? How many people have seen a three-piece band featuring a female singer who also writes a vast majority of the lyrics? This is Tinfoil!

The band features Dave Harms on guitar and vocals, Cher Bibler on bass and vocals and David Smith on drums. According to Harms, he and Smith played together in a high school band and later decided to get together and play. They ran across Bibler at a poetry reading where she was performing and the band was formed.

"It just all seemed to gel together," Harms said. "We didn't know if it was going to work."

The band from Tiffin has been together for nearly a year and has played in Tiffin, Bowling Green and Toledo. They recorded their first six-song EP on a $300 budget, in a period of about one month spaced out throughout the year.

"It's kind of rough, but it's the best sound we could get," Smith said.

The musical sound of the band is not one that you would expect. Cher Bibler sounds like a mixture between Janis Joplin and the lead singer of Concrete Blonde. Meanwhile, the male vocals tend to lend a punkish and progressive tone to the music.

"We've been put in the commercial alternative category," Harms said.

The band performs original songs and does a couple of cover songs, which Harms usually sings. "There aren't too many cover tunes that Cher can do," Harms said.

According to Smith, the combination adds diversity and makes the band more versatile.

One of the first things that is noticeable about Tinfoil is the poetic style of the lyrics. Smith credits poet Bibler for the influence.

"She is a writer for the Waste-land Review," he said.

The lyrics are not simply superficial. Many of them have double meanings or look at serious issues. "Counting Backwards," is a song written by Bibler about the gay lifestyle and the "life that gay men are forced to adopt because of the phony rules established by 'respectable' society."

"I'm counting backwards from the stars down to the sea/I'm counting all the lies they told to you and me/They glow like memories, little pinpricks in the sky/I watch and more of them keep floating into sight."

Tinfoil can be heard on WBGU 88.1 FM, or on WFAL cable 14. Not only do they receive regular airplay, but they have also charted at #35 in the College Music Journal twice, including an appearance last week.
